Shrubs Need Mulch Until Warm Weather

You'd better not get your shrubs and other landscape plants "out of bed" too soon this spring, cautions Joseph T. Cox, extension specialist in landscape architecture at Michigan State College.

Spring may be just around the corner but there is still a chance for a lot of freezing and thawing. Heaving of roots in the soil will prove detrimental if no mulches are used or are removed too soon.

Let mulches such as leaves, straw, or peat moss remain until you are sure the spring weather is here to stay, he advises. Then work this material into the soil about your plants instead of raking and burning. Your soil will improve in humus content, water holding capacity, and plant food elements.

Your landscape plants will not only thrive with these methods but you will be simplifying summer cultivation and weed control.
