ROLLING DOWN THE RIVER

By Bob Kettler

We sold a new Studebaker to a fellow the other day and he seemed to like it fine. Told us, while he was waiting for delivery, that he wanted to do a lot of driving during the early part of the evenings ahead, since he had decided that he wasn't enough of a mathematician to decipher his son's arithmetic homework any longer. "Just the other evening," he said, "I was deep in the next day's problems, when this son of mine looked over my shoulder and pipes up, 'for goodness sake Dad, is that all the farther you are? What will you do when I get in high school, if it takes all night to figure a couple of sixth grade problems?'"

Under the circumstances we figure we'd go for a ride too. But then that won't happen to us, ever. Never was much fond of arithmetic and couldn't tell cube over my shoulder, and pipes up, "for goodness sake Dad, is that all the farther you are? What will you do when I get in high school, if it takes all night to figure a couple of sixth grade problems?"

Friend of ours down the street was complaining of being pretty tired from too much dashing here and there. "Really even the house," he stated, "who come hibernation time in the fall, left a note with his friend the woodpecker to wake him up at half past April."

Well, let him sleep. We've got work to do and save the boys in the shop if you're going to give that car of yours the care it deserves. Chances are it needs new oil, new lubrication, and it won't hurt before fall really gets performance, too, for those long autumn drives before old man winter starts to get tough.

That's all, but the lug in our parts department says, "Chivalry today is a man's attitude towards any woman... If she's good looking and a stranger."

Yours,

Why?

You may wonder why your physician gave you a prescription this time when he called on you, when on the last call he gave you some medicine directly. Without a physician can do so, he gives you medicine. But he is limited to the kinds and amounts of drugs he has on hand. The modern physician knows he cannot possibly keep in his office all the "specifics" that have been developed to meet the varying needs of his individual patients. To practice modern medicine, he must write prescriptions, making use of the thousands of drugs available in a well-equipped pharmacy.

When you have a prescription to be filled, bring it to our Rexall Pharmacist.
