1st Lt. Lussenden Serving In Korea

First Lieutenant Donald A. Lussenden, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Lussenden, 25114 Greening Boulevard, Farmington, is serving with the First Cavalry Division on the fighting front in Korea, Army authorities report.

The division, a veteran infantry force of the Korean war, spearheaded the first offensive against the Communists last year in the spectacular breakthrough northward from the Taegu perimeter.

Lussenden, who was a prisoner of war in Germany for two years during World War II, is in the Division's 7th Cavalry Regiment. He was recalled to active duty in November, 1950, and was stationed at Fort Leonard Wood, Missouri, and Indiantown Gap, Pennsylvania, before his Korean assignment.

The Stuart Shaulders of Farmington Road spent Saturday in Ann Arbor.

ROLLING DOWN THE RIVER

By Bob Kettler

So the other day a lady in a '49 Studebaker drove in the garage and without waiting to be asked, announced she wanted a new V-8 Commander, but was going to tell us a story first.

"You've been getting by too long," she stated, "with some rather sad stories in that column of yours, so why not improve it with this one."

"Once upon a time (and that's another thing, if you don't say 'once upon a time' people will think your stories are nothing but big fibs) there lived a much married woman. When she was young and beautiful, she married a rich man. When he died, she inherited a lot of money and thus could afford to marry an actor. But that marriage didn't last and next on the list was the family doctor, who didn't wear too well as a member of the family, so finally she married a funeral director. It seems this gal never could get over that children's verse which goes 'one for the money, two for the show, three to get ready and four to go'."

Well, after that we hurried and sold her the new Studebaker, because for all we know, she just might up and take the column from us. Won't have to worry much for a while though, at least not until she has fully discovered how wonderful the V-8 Studebaker really is. . . . all that power, all that comfort, all that ease of driving in one compact unit, usually makes a new owner forget to eat breakfast to say nothing of writing columns. We could say something of extra economy, too, but she drove her last Studebaker for over two years and will take the amazing economy of the car as something she has every right to expect.

We rather like this time of the year. In our book, fall is the finest season of them all. Zesty, tangy air, beautiful new colors, crisp cool nights and then, most of the restaurants in these parts have finally removed potato salad from the menu.

Getting near the end of this week's literary output and the shop won't forgive us if we get to tell you to come in for a fall tune-up, fall lubrication and a shot of cold serum for your radiator (they call it antifreeze). These U. S. No. 1 graded prime (been reading the steak advertisements) mechanics of ours think more of your car than you do and the peculiar thing is they'll keep it giving top quality service all fall and winter, if you'll just give them the chance.

Must go now, but a waitress up the street tells us that husbands are awkward things to deal with. Even keeping them in constant hot water will not keep them tender.

Yours,
BOB KETTLER

Dan Guy Assigned Rank Of Cadet Major At MSC

Dan M. Guy, Jr., of Grosse Pointe, has been appointed Wing Intelligence Officer and assigned the rank of Cadet Major in the 18th Officers Training Wing at Michigan State College. Cadet Guy is a senior at M. S. C. Army authorities report. He formerly lived in Farmington.

The 18th Officers Training Wing, organized within the Air Force Reserve Officers Training Corps at East Lansing, was initiated this fall. It is unique among AFROTC units in that it delegates much of the responsibility for operation of the unit to the cadets.

The structure of the organization will closely parallel a regular Air Force wing, with a Cadet Colonel in command and various staff officers assigned under him.

In announcing this program, Colonel Graeme S. Bond, Professor of Air Science and Tactics, stated that it is designed to give the potential Air Force officer an opportunity to gain some practical experience in command and administrative functions before entering into active service.

Scout Leaders To Study

The Detroit Area Boy Scout Council's nationally famous Training Center at the Charles Howell Scout Reservation near Brighton will be the scene of a Training of Trainers' Institute in which several members of the National and Regional staffs will assist local executives in a three-day training program, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, October 19, 20 and 21.
