

OBSERVATION POINT

New Town Concept Big Suburban Problem

By EUGENE McKINNEY

While Publisher Philin H. Power is on vacation, guest col-umnists have been asked to comment on the long-range issues and problems facing suburbia. Taday's guest is mayor of our youngest Placing the right words Placing the right works are neatly into sentences, the right sentences neatly into paragraphs and have them all come together with "The Message" is a punishment I haven't experienced since I left the public press almost five years ago. years ago.

The job is even tougher The job is even tougher than I remember. And doing it under the pretentious title of "guest columnist" — which implies I'm suppose to have some profound thoughts — makes the job tougher still.

It's ironic — and perhaps a little discouraging, too — that I've been asked to comment on a topic many of us were com-menting on five or more years ago:

The suburban fight for identity. Like the women's desire to be more than "just a housewife," communities still struggle to be more than another name on the map.

another name on the map.
There's been some gain.
But it's slow and painful, and in spite of dramatic population shifts to the suburbs, shifts to the suburbs, sociologists and urbanologists still hang on to the concept that "downtown is where it's at." And the New Town concept actually planning and building communities from scratch – is heralded as a major new development in urban living.

YET THE NEW TOWN YET THE NEW TOWN concept is exactly what many suburban governments have been grappling with for the past 5 years. For we have been given the improbable assignment of building towns around subdivisions of people brought into sterile territory for no better reason than a builder figured the price was right for figured the price was right for the land. The result: Thousands of people thrown together without the community roots needed to

"Detroiters" become "suburbanites," simply because the wife happens to spot an ideal model home. Quite often, the city in which the home is located has little to do with the move.

The battle to change from that broad "suburbanite" label to the specific "Westlander" or "Livonian" tag affects how deeply people care about their community and what they're willing to do to get the services If people don't have con-cern for the community they live in, they're not going to care much about what goes on outside their 60 by 120 lot. And won't care about supthey won't care about sup-porting community im-provement programs --whether its buying park land, paving roads or building libraries.

ENCOURAGING PEOPLE to think of themselves as Westlanders instead of suburbanites and to want to "point with pride" at our community has been a major thrust of my administration. At a time when institutions are time when institutions are thrust of my administration. At a time when institutions are under great fire and distrust, we're asking people to take pride in their community and their government.

What's so important about community pride and community remained in the community identity?

In practical terms, the two mean that citizens care enough about local problems to do something positive toward a solution; they mean that citizens care enough to want their community to stand on its own two feet and make the two feet and make the own two feet and make the sacrifice necessary to build ice rinks, libraries, police stations, swimming pools and all the other facilities older established communities like Livonia have had for some

Without pride, without a wide-spread belief in the community, ambitious programs of progress fall victim to a hand full of obstructionists who shout the loudest and the longest.

It's often said that

It's orten said than everyone wants progress but no one wants change. But progress and change can both happen if a community stands up and demands them.

And before anyone does that, they have to have that that, they have to have the certain feeling for their community as a home town — not just as a retreat after the day's work. That's really what community pride and identity are all about.

WHAT HAVE WE done to what have we done to make Westlanders have pride in their community and identify with it as a home town? First, we've emphasized citizen involvement through new commissions such as the Housing Commission, Historical Commission, Historical Commission, Library Board and En-vironmental Quality Com-mission. We created two Mayor's Advisory Councils – one for senior citizens, the other for youth for youth. Our Historical Commission is currently overseeing the renovation of a 98-year-old building for a museum, where someday soon Westlanders will be able to take an active interest in their community

The Westland Civic Symphony Orchestra debuted this spring with some 500

Westlanders watching and listening.

Christmas tree lighting ceremonies at City Hall bring several thousand Westlanders to their Civic Center now – many for the first time. And we've started a Christmas decoration program on our main streets.

And perhaps the most And pernaps the most successful program, the Spring Festival, has already focused wide attention to Westland in just two years. Hundreds of Westlanders worked six months on this year's festival that saw more than 50,000 come out in these days. three days!

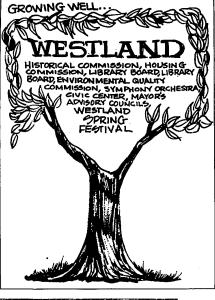

TO OLDER COM-MUNITIES with longstanding sociological structure (Plymouth, Livonia and Farmington, for example) I'm sure these programs sound elementary. Possibly even unimportant.

But to cities lost in the freeway drive west from Detroit, or to a new city like Westland, I think these programs and more like them will give that much-needed spirit - yes, even roots - to suburban communities.

Our city's motto is "Pride, Progress and Promise"...and I would add to that, "People." We're making progress, we have great promise.

But it takes the people to bring out pride.

Leonard Poger writes

Entire Story Not Told

Political candidates usually start off campaigns with a flowery announcement of their intentions for higher office. In some cases, that is the high spot of the candidate's campaign which gets progressively

But The Observer had that rare occasion last week in which the candidate more or less botched up the initial announcement.
THE CANDIDATE is Mrs.

Kay Beard of Inkster who is seeking the Democratic nomination for the newly-created 33rd House district, which includes Garden City and Inkster.

Her actions – or omissions – concerned the lack of candor about her school financing activities the candidate bragged about in her press re-

Mrs Beard wrote about her 11 years of campaigning for "quality education and educa-tional financing for Michigan schools" and her testimony be-fore congressional and legis-lative sub-committees on "be-belf of her educational efforts" half of her educational efforts.

THIS SOUNDS typical of a PTA-type who has marched on the state capital demanding tax reform for public school financ-

But the impression Mrs. Beard tried to impart in her an-Beard tried to impart in lier aim nouncement didn't square with what actually happened in the past decade – particularly in the 1969-70 period. She is a member of the state board of directors for Citizens for Education Freedom. The crupus is forement in the fight to group is foremost in the fight to group is foremost in the right to raid the public tax box for sup-port of parochial schools in Michigan.

Theparochiaid battlewas the most emotionally-charged con-troversy in the state until bus-ing came along and C.E.F. was is the frent lines the front lines.

WE DON'T question the group's right to work for pro-grams or ideals they feel are justified but Mrs. Beard feels "dead issue" now and asked The Observer to omit that part of her background in her an-nouncement for the state house election.

Whether parochiaid is a dead issue or not is a matter of opin-ion but if sufficient candidates who share the same feelings of Mrs. Beard on parochiaid get

Mrs. Beard on parochiaid get elected this year, we get the feeling that the issue will be resurrected in Lansing. WHAT'S EVEN more important is that Mrs. Beard felt that the voters in the new district shouldn't know about her parechiaid beachtmung.

parochiaid background.

We don't blame her - particularly in view of the fact that Garden City voters two years ago approved a state constitu-tional amendment banning public funds for parochial public funds for parocinas schools by a 2-1 margin. Now that she knows how the community feels about paro-chiaid, she prefers to doctor her past history to avoid letting vot-ers know her background. We feel that the voters should heavy as much about political know as much about political candidates as possible – not as little as the candidate is willing to get by with in a press release

Tim Richard writes

Roth Decision Has Suburbs Seething

The suburbs are in an ugly mood over Federal Judge Stephen Roth's ordering of cross-district busing to achieve racial balance, a decision opposed by 80 or 90 per cent of the populace.

Roth is directly responsible for a movement to tinker with the 14th amendment of the U.S. Constitution, a movement to Constitution, a movement to eliminate lifetime appointments of federal judges, talk of massive parental resistance to his order, the resistance to his order, the defeat of school tax measures, the redneck Wallace's shocking presidential primary victory, and the threat of the worst breakdown in public order since Prohibition.

Personally, this writer is opposed to all those measures. My reason is that Roth's findings and orders are so defective, so short-sighted, so arbitrary that a good lawyer should be able to win a reversal in the appeals courts.

SOME EXAMPLES:

Roth's Sept. 27 ruling declares Detroit schools are financially hampered by the state and that suburbs can spend more per pupil with "less tax effort." He's just plain Detroit in fact has a greater tax base per pupil than Livonia, Farmington, Clarenceville, Wayne-Westland, Redford Union and Garden City, to cite a few local examples. Moreover, tew local examples. Moreover, every Observerland school district levies a considerably higher millage rate than Detroit. How Roth reached his incredible and utterly false conclusion is beyond me.

Roth sarcastically notes that the intervening suburban school districts chose not 'to assist the court' in determining an area to be desegregated. It's like inviting a condemned man to choose his method of execution without letting him argue his innocence. It's unfair on the face of it.

Roth condemns the state and thus the suburbs - because the Legislature passed a Detroit school decentralization Detroit school decentralization act. He thereby insulted suburban legislators who voted in favor of the bill at the request of blacks. The legislators are thus in the position of being damned by their black colleagues if they had voted against the bill and damned by Poth for voting in favor. Roth for voting in favor.

BY A WILD twist of logic, Roth declares his goal is to 'achieve the greatest possible degree of actual desegregation" and "to enforce constitutional rights, not to act as schoolmaster."

And in a footnote, he cavalierly disregards evidence that massive integration would bring only the most trivial benefits to black pupils.

Yet Earl Warren's 1954 Supreme Court relied on educational evidence for outlawing "separate but equal school segregation in the first place. Roth is emphatic that his god is desegregation, not good education, and he has per-verted the Warren Court's Michigan conducted a 71/2-month Constitutional Convention and millions of dollars worth of studies on how to improve its educational system. Now Roth gives the superintendent of public in-struction a mere 45 days to make recommendations on "governance, financial and administrative arrangements" for a metropolitan system that would mark a far more radical would mark a far more rautear change than anything ever before contemplated. Talk about the "instant satisfaction" syndrome of the television ind! Roth is more demanding than any cranky four-year-old ever thought of being.

Roth refers to the Richmond, Va. desegregation case, but astoundingly makes no note whatsoever of the 4th Court of whatsoever of the 4th Control Appeals decision reversing it.
And so, after inventing his
"facts" and twisting his law, Roth simply disregards a superior court's decision that esn't match his own notions.

THAT RICHMOND case,

incidentally, is remarkably similar to the Detroit case.

The Appeals Court noted that the district judge's tricounty integration plan "is the equivalent, despite disclaimer, of the imposition of a fixed racial quota. The Constitution imposes no such requirement" and the district judge exceeded his powers in ordering one his powers in ordering one.

The Appeals Court also gunned down the lower court because its 325-page opinion lacked "the slightest scintilla of evidence" that the historic school district boundaries were rigged to perpetuale racial discrimination. Similarly, Roth also makes no such claim, but rather grandiosely condemns state, federal, mortgage lending and real estate agencies for drawing racial lines.

Because there was contention that Richmond's school boundaries were rigged, the Appeals Court declares the district court exceeded its district court exceeded its powers in ordering a tri-county reorganization. You can see why Roth, with his mind made up, would ignore such a precedent.

Those are only samples there are many other flaws in Roth's decisions. What is more troubling, however, as one pores through hundreds of pores through numereds of pages of documents, are Roth's s are a s m s , h is authoritarianism, his wild generalizations, his absurd notions of how long kindergartners can stay on a bus, his utter narrowness of vision.

A higher court will likely reverse Roth's decision - but what do we do about Roth himself?

Editorial & Opinion

OBSERVER NEWSPAPERS, INC.

The Livonia Observer - The Redford Observer The Westland Observer - The Garden City Observer The PI<sub>3</sub> mouth Mail & Observer - The Southfield News & Observer The Farmington Enterprise & Observer

Published by Observer Newspapers, Inc 36251 Schoolcraft, Livonia, Mich. 48150

Sersing the communities of:
Psymouth Plymouth Township, Canton Township, Farmington
Farmington Township, Redford Township, Garden City, Westland, Southfield, Lathrup Village. Bingham Farms.