MAZZONI OWNS a former poultry store and two small frame homes just south of the strip where the second theater would be located. He said he wanted to buy the school board building and donate it for use as a private drug abuse center. Purchase of the land owned by the school board would protect it, Mazzoni added.
"It isn't fair." Mazzoni said after revealing that he rejected a $455,000 offer from an oil company three years ago to build a gasoline station on the corner where the jewelry store and former two-story hotel now stand.

COMING TO the defense of the theater owners, City Councilman James Plakas praised the Shafer family "for taking the initiative" and providing its own parking instead of looking for a han-dout"
