SHOULD WAYNE BE REORGANIZED

WAYNE 18th

Incumbent County Commissioner Richard Manning, Democrat, faces William L. Roskelly, Republican, and Brownie S. Shaltis Jr., American Independent.

Manning has been a commissioner since 1971 and was Redford Township supervisor between 1955 and 1959. He is an attorney and partner in Manning and Finn law firm. He earned his law degree from the University of Detroit.

"County government should be reorganized with separate and distinct administrative and legislative branches responsible for these separate functions," he said in a League of Women Voters guide. He said certain posts, such as the drain office, should be reviewed with the possibility of eliminating the duplicating services.

Roskelly is president of Basney and Smith Inc., consulting engineers, land planners and surveyors. He became known in the area for his attempts, and final success, at getting a court injunction placed on the sale of bonds to finance a domed stadium on Detroit's riverfront.

Neither Roskelly or Shaltis answered the LWV questionnaire.

WAYNE 19th

Mary E. Dumas, Republican, and Eldon R. Raymond, Democrat, are running for the 19th commissioner seat. (Incumbent John McCann is seeking another office.)

Mrs. Dumas is a Livonia resident and a trustee at Schoolcraft College. She is a substitute teacher in Livonia and a member of the regional development council of the Southeast Michigan Council of Governments.

County government should be "further streamlined for added efficiency, economy and closer coordination of planning," she said. Semi-autonomous boards and commissions should be reorganized or placed under direct control of the elected commissioners "to give voters a greater voice in county government," Mrs. Dumas added.

Raymond, also a Livonia resident, is general manager and vice president of a commercial and industrial financial institution and a member of the Livonia Zoning Board of Appeals.

"I feel that every effort should be made to establish home rule government so that we might have every available tool to work with in an effort to solve the many problems confronting the county in its effort to service the citizens," he said.
