Atmospheric Dining: Intimacy America And Elegant French

It's been a frantic, hectic week . . . you've got to get yourself together for some of the civilized amenities of conversation and good food.

You needn't go far. The Observer area has a number of places that will soothe your nerves and delight your palate as well.

Hillside: A Walden

A visit to the Hillside Inn in Plymouth is an experience well worth having. Tucked into a scenic hilly setting, the restaurant, which has had many additions since its beginning as a roadside grill way back in 1934, is a collection of smallish, comfortable rooms, none of which exceeds a capacity of over 100 seats.

"We feel that people go out to eat for intimacy," explains co-manager Betty Stremich who runs the Hillside with her brother, Robert. "Although we have a total seating capacity of over 400, we have tried to stay away from the banquet hall kind of look."

One of the nicest rooms is the Walden, so named after Henry David Thoreau's search for restfulness and peace of mind. If you'll find such relaxation anywhere in the busy world of '72 it will indeed be in this room, which is done in shades of blue and green and overlooks a tranquil country scene.

Another room -- the Beacon -- has just been refurbished with a whole collection of antique clocks, part of the Hillside's current attempt to add a genuine touch of history to a decor that is already traditional and American in feeling.

The menu further carries out that theme. Rather than being exotic or Continental, it features a good variety of standard American style dishes such as steaks and sea food, although out of the way things like dolphin are occasionally to be had.

Particularly well worth trying is the tender red snapper which sells for a moderate $5.40.

Dinners are particularly ample, including not only the usual selection of soup or juice and salad, but a relish tray and dessert as well -- except for meals taken in the Walden Room or lounge. Such a bountiful spread is pleasantly old-fashioned in a world where many restaurants have come to charge separately for a number of courses.

The relish tray is a notable treat with such goodies as beef spread, ham and relish, corn and bean relish -- and a special favorite -- finnan haddie, a Scottish paste of smoked fish, just one of the things that keeps satisfied customers coming back for more.

Master's Touches

The onion soup is baked French style in a crack and comes to your table all cheesy and crusty on top ...

The Chateaubriand is served flaming and is carved at your table ...

There's dancing as well on Fridays and Saturdays with the Arrangement and vocalist Ron Roms to entertain you.

You'll find all of this at Master's Restaurant and Lounge on 7 Mile and Middlebelt, one of the nicest places in the Observer area for that special night out.

Lunch, too, has some unique touches.

Try a Jumbo Bloody Mary, a lunch time favorite, served in a huge goblet for $1.25.
