

It was just two years ago when an Observer Newspapers team sat down around a ouija board to foretell events of great consequence in Observerland.

The ouija board is a device for receiving psychical messages—either from the subconscious minds of the ouija board experimenters or from a discarnate personality, a spirit.

Typically, the surface of a ouija board has the alphabet printed on it in large-type capital letters, the numbers 0 to 9, "yes" and "no." A gliding "planchette," a tripod with a window, sits on the board. Three persons are required.

The board rests on the knees of two workers, their fingers touching either side of the planchette. The third person records the messages that show through the window as the tripod races around the board.

WHEN THE OBSERVER staff started this noble tradition, they had no idea of how accurate their predictions would be. Imagine their surprise when every single one turned out false. Now, 100 per cent results are hard to improve upon.

The reader is duly cautioned.

Questions are printed in lower case letters, with the ouija board
