

CEDAR LINED closet at right provides not only more storage space than it did before (left), but also a safe place to store moth-susceptible garments and other woollens. Lining a closet with cedar is an easy and inexpensive job. It can be done by the average handyman-husband over the weekend.

Extra Lamps, Lighting Make 'Bathroom Plus'

We've come a long way since the birth of indoor plumbing. Cleopatra had a dozen hand-maidens to fill her tub with perfumes and oils. But even she would be jealous of some of the affordable luxuries you can add to your bathroom.

Witness, special lamps:

- Heat lamps. Infrared bulbs give instant heat that warms the body by radiation rather than by heating the air. They provide quick heat in the spring and fall when regular house-heating is not operating... or for keeping the baby warm while crying and dressing. Because of condensation, the hard-glass type of heat lamp is recommended in bathrooms to avoid shattering.
- Sun lamps. During rainy weather along the Nile, you can bet Cleopatra would have loved to use a sun lamp. Properly used, sun lamps can maintain a healthy tan year-round. Reflector lamps in either recessed fixtures over the lavatory, or hooded bulb fixtures on either side of the mirror, may be used.
- Be sure to follow manufacturer's instructions regarding distance and exposure time. Check local wiring codes before installing both sun and heat lamps.
- Ozone lamps. Ozone lamps are small four watt bulbs that rotate the oxygen in the air, destroying unpleasant odors. The ozone lamp should be mounted above eye level in a shielded metal fixture, and never viewed directly because it may have harmful effects on the eyes.
- Night lights. Illumination at night is necessary in the bathroom. The panelescent Nile Lite provides just enough see-power for dark-adapted eyes. An electroluminescent source that consumes very little electricity, it runs continuously at a cost of a few pennies a year.

ONE WARNING--Be careful to place lamps in bathrooms where they won't be splashed with water. One drop of water hitting hot lamp can cause it to shatter and send glass flying all over the place.

Nothing Like Real Sleep

There's a sleep myth to the effect that just resting in bed, even if you toss around and can't sleep, is as valuable as sleep itself. But this is challenged by medical findings.

Three hours of good sleep, according to researchers at a mattress company, may be more refreshing than eight hours of being in bed while the mind is occupied with the cares of the day.

Anything that disturbs sleep, such as uncomfortable bed clothes, a lumpy mattress, or a poorly ventilated room, should be avoided.

Handy Jim's FIX-UP TIPS

Easy Does It!

SAVING prefinished or plain hardwood is a breeze with a power tool or hand saw--an important point to the do-it-yourself home improvement fan. The home handyman will be amazed at the speed with which he can panel a room--either new or existing--using Masonite brand panels, which come in easy-to-handle 4x8-foot sizes and a variety of prefinished surfaces, textures and colors.

Paneling may be applied either with color-matched nails or with cartridge adhesive, which reduces installation time. Staining, blending or contrasting moldings also are available to give construction a professional, finished appearance.

Windows Contribute To Beauty Of Home

If you look through a window and never see it, you're missing a lot.

Windows are often taken for granted. But, their contribution to home comfort and beauty is too great to overlook. When choosing windows, be sure they offer the best available benefits: good style, visibility, ventilation and insulation.

Operating, or ventilating, windows are important year-round, even in air-conditioned homes. Invigorating fresh air circulation is as vital to home comfort in winter as cool breezes are in summer. In the artificial climate of air-conditioned homes, fresh air provides welcome relief.

Casement windows of ponderosa pine, which open out at a 90-degree angle, are popular ventilating windows. They are often used in combination with fixed sash.

Also effective as ventilating units are awning windows, which open up and out, and hoppers, which open in and down. Even in rainy weather, awning units can be left open for ventilation.

EFFECTIVE home insulation requires windows with good insulating capabilities. Engineering tests show that wood sash windows with insulating glass and factory-applied weatherstripping substantially cut heat loss and keep rooms comfortable year-round. By promoting efficient use of heating and cooling systems, the windows also help conserve fuel and reduce costs.

Use of insulating glass. Available in all styles of ponderosa pine windows, it eliminates the need for storm sash.

Good visibility often depends on choice of window styles and proper window placement. Bow and bay windows generally afford the largest glass expanses.

Casements and sliders offer uninterrupted glass areas, and are often used in series for more extensive views. Awnings and hoppers stacked one atop the other can open up a whole wall to the outdoors.

A RULE of thumb for proper window placement is to set them at eye level. This means that in living and dining rooms, where people sit most of the time, windows should be set lower in the wall than in kitchens, where people are most likely to stand.

Whenever possible, window styles should complement a home's architecture. The variety of ponderosa pine window styles available in stock sizes at local lumber dealers, makes such choices feasible.

EARLY AMERICAN CHARM -- The warmth of Early American furnishings and cotton fabrics is what gives this bedroom its charm. Glenmere, an all-cotton fabric from Waverly, features a colorful floral print in yellows and reds. It's used effectively for bedspread, slip cover, and draperies. A wooden trunk and random-planked flooring add a touch of authenticity to this gracious room.
