KENSINGTON PARK NATURE TRAILS

Take a wintry ride to Kensington Park on the I-96 freeway and get reacquainted with the white loveliness that is winter.

Make the Nature Center Building your first stop for it is the hub of activities in the wildlife sanctuary at Kensington and serves as the starting point for all the nature trails. It is filled with exhibits aimed at helping you to understand the natural environment.

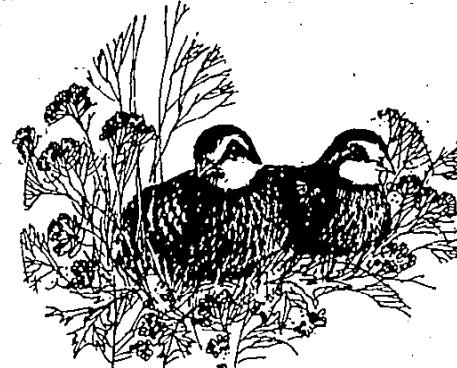

Tamarack Trail . . . ½ mile. A short trail which explores the tamarack bog and several of the ecological communities bordering the bog.

Aspen Trail . . . 1 ¼ miles. Wandering along the edges of several different habitats, this medium length trail provides abundant occasions for observing bird life.

Wildwing Trail . . . 2 miles. This trail contrasts deep woods with open fields; lakeshore paths and scenic hilltops; offering many opportunities for observing the waterbirds for which the trail and the lake are named.

All trails are marked by labels which point out to visitors the ecological relationships between plant and animal life.

A trip to Kensington Park would provide an unexpected midwinter treat for families, classrooms or scout troops, especially those interested in ecology. Appointments for naturalist services may be made through the Detroit office of: Huron-Clinton Metropolitan Authority, 600 Woodward, Detroit, Mich. 48226.
