Crime Seminar Comes To End At Adas Shalom

The second part of the two-part seminar, "Crime On The Streets," will be held in Congregation Adas Shalom, 29901 Middle Belt, Farmington, on Monday, Feb. 12. The first session of the seminar was held last fall in Southfield.
The programs are sponsored by the League of Jewish Women's Organizations of Greater Detroit, who will again host a six-man panel to speak on various aspects of the subject and be available for questions from the audience.

A FORERUNNER to the seminar is an exhibit in the halls at Harvard Row, 11 Mile and Lahser, in Southfield, on Thursday and Friday, Feb. 8-9. This will be the second year the league has used an exhibit to introduce its works to the public.

An informal drop-in tea will be given on both of these days at Empress Gardens, in the mall. Presidents of the participating organizations will serve as hostesses from 2 to 4 p.m. each day.
The league is not competitive, but judging of the exhibits submitted by the individual member organizations will be done on artistic quality and originality by a panel of judges for three awards.
A popular vote by the general public will comprise the fourth award. Winners will be announced at the league's 45th annual meeting, at the same time the crime seminar is given.
Panel moderator will be John Kelly, WXYZ.

newscaster. Panelists will be: John Nichols, Detroit police commissioner; Johannes Spreen, Oakland County sheriff; Dr. Emanuel Tanay, psychiatrist and national authority on gun control; Thomas Plunkett, former Oakland County prosecuting attorney; and James N. Garber, chief of the criminal division of the Wayne County Prosecuting Attorney's office.
The Sisterhood of Adas Shalom will host a brunch beginning at 11 a.m., one hour before the discussion.
All league activities Feb. 8-12 are free and open to the public.
