Anais Nin To Speak At U-M

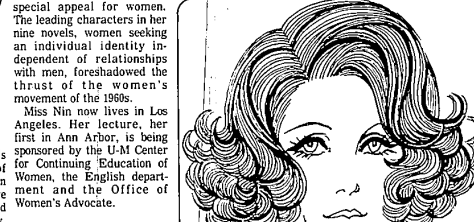

Anais Nin, novelist, diarist and one of the most celebrated figures on the international literary scene, will speak and give readings from her work at 8 p.m. Tuesday, Feb. 27, in Rackham Lecture Hall, University of Michigan campus, Ann Arbor.

In 1966, the appearance of the first volume of her famed "Diaries" brought her instant critical acclaim and international fame.

Though not precisely a feminist, Miss Nin has had a special appeal for women. The leading characters in her nine novels, women seeking an individual identity independent of relationships with men, foreshadowed the thrust of the women's movement of the 1960s.

Miss Nin now lives in Los Angeles. Her lecture, her first in Ann Arbor, is being sponsored by the U-M Center for Continuing Education of Women, the English department and the Office of Women's Advocate.

Mrs. Lynn DiDomincis is in charge of the project. All proceeds will go for community service projects.
