Heart Disease Almost Fatal to Young Girl

"My daughter, when thirteen years old, was stricken with heart trouble. She was so bad we had to place her in bed near a window so she could get her breath. One day she said, 'Poor child, she is likely to fall dead any time.' A friend told me Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy had cured her father, so I tried it, and she began to improve. She took a great many bottles, but she is as good as cured now. I am a mother of four children, and I am a great admirer of Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy. I have in Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy, A. R. CANNON, Concord, Mo."

checked girl. No one can imagine the confidence I have in Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy. A. R. CANNON, Concord, Mo."

The unbounded confidence Mr. Cannon has in Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy is shared by thousands of others who know its value from experience. Many heart disorders yield to treatment, if the treatment is right. If you are bothered with short breath, fainting spells, swelling of feet or ankles, pains about the heart and shoulder blades, palpitation, weak and hungry spells, you should begin using Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy at once. Profit by the experience of others while you may.

Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy is sold and guaranteed by all druggists.

Northville is making extensive plans for the annual Chautauque, which opens on August 16th and closes August 20th, five days in all, which is booked through the Central Chautauque system. The entertainments for this year are said to be exceptionally good, and will doubtless draw big crowds, not only in Northville itself, but from the surrounding territory and villages. Farmington will doubtless send over a delegation for one or more days.

The ice cream social given by Livonia Center Sunday School last Saturday evening, and given at the Hobbins farm home was a success from every standpoint, and a cool evening only heightened the good time that was had. The Detroit orchestra which was expected, failed to appear, owing to an accident. A piano player put in an appearance however. Twenty gallons of ice cream was consumed during the evening, and proceeds amounting to $12 was realized, above all expenses.

Accounting for the Absence. Bacon—"I see what most attracted the attention of a party of distinguished Europeans on an American tour was the absence of fences and hedges." Egbert—"They might have reached a locality in the West recently visited by a cyclone."

TWO OF THE MASKERS

By ARTHUR BOLTONWOOD.

(Copyright, 1914, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

A truly awe-inspiring footman in livery led Craymore down the stairs, whispered to another footman standing by the heavy portiers, and withdrew noiselessly. This second footman held aside the old tapestry, which had undoubtedly worn thin the fingers of cloistered nuns centuries ago, and announced: "Mr. Robert Withington Craymore," in a loud, clear voice, to which no one seemed to pay the least attention, and stood aside for Craymore to enter.

Craymore found himself in a room filled with men in summer evening clothes and the most gorgeously gowned women he had ever seen. A stout little bald-headed man near the door, who could not have helped hearing the announcement of his name, said: "Hello, Craymore, old chap," as Craymore passed him, and a pretty young woman just beyond nodded to him brightly.

He found himself at last before a dull, bored-looking man, who stooped down and whispered, even as he clasped Craymore's hand: "I never could remember names!"

"Craymore," the young man replied with that engaging smile he knew so well how to use.

"Of course, of course," said the bored man rather apologetically. "Ought to remember 'em better, but can't seem to get the hang of doing it. My dear," he turned to the stout, valuable woman beside him, "here is Craymore."

Thus he washed his hands of Craymore and went on looking drearily bored.

"Oh, Mr. Craymore, so good of you to come. Where have you been hiding yourself, naughty boy? Are you in a position to try for holy orders? One would think so from all we see of you these days. Oh, Alice, I want you to know Mr. Craymore. Craymore, Miss Leyden. You lucky girl! No one tangles quite like this Craymore. Run along now, and prove to her how truthful I am. And don't forget—a dance with me at 11!"

Thus did she dismiss Craymore and continue being visible. It was really easier than Craymore had supposed.

He lunged in the big, glaring gold and white ballroom with Alice Leyden, and when a man came to claim her at the end of the dance he was told how divinely he danced, and passed on to a Miss Greig, who chattered while she danced.

At the end of that dance, Miss Greig being promptly claimed, he found himself quite free. He found a sort of conservatory just off the ballroom, with little orange trees in bloom and a tiny fountain playing musically into a big pool of Japanese goldfish.

He sat down to adjust things. He had done the thing and it was ridiculous. It almost spoiled it all to think there had been no more call to use his wits.

Then his thought were interrupted by a girl's rippling laughter. He liked the sound of that voice even before he saw the girl herself. And he liked the girl when she came into view, even better. There were two swains in attendance with her.

She looked quickly at Craymore sitting by one of the little blossoming orange trees, half nodded, and laughingly dismissed her two knights. Craymore jumped to his feet.

"You are not having a good time," said the girl, quite unexpectedly.

"Why, how on earth do you know that?" he asked.

"Your face tells it plainly," said she. "You are moping alone over something. Cheer up, I'm not, either."

Five dances she sat out with him in the little room of the goldfish and blossoming orange trees. Craymore had prided himself that he was not particularly susceptible to women, but this girl was like no other he had ever seen or known. That was what he had come here to find out—if these girls use me here were so wonderfully different.

"This time it's to say good-night, or good-morning," she said. "I wish," and there was a little playful note in her voice. "It didn't have to be good-by. Of course, you'll never see me again."

So she had seen through him all the time!

"I wish it didn't have to be good-by, too," said he. "But, since you've seen through me I may as well save my face as best I can. It was ridiculously easy. Far easier than I thought it would be, indeed."

"What do you mean?" she asked, puzzled.

"Even these clothes I have on are hired for the occasion," said he. "I simply drove up in state in hired car in a hired car and gave my name bravely and in rather bored fashion—"

"Then you haven't any right here?" "I thought you had," said he.

"Why, no," said he. "Why no," she repeated. "I said would have to be good-by because I thought you were one of these people and speaking of hired things—this gown is hired and so was the car I came in, and, Oh, dear!"

She fell up to laughing immoderately.

"Who are you?" she demanded at length.

"My name is Craymore. I'm a lawyer—without clients as yet, but I have hopes."

"And I am Elsie Dunlap, a china buyer in a downtown department store."
