The Flame of Acetylene Light is Small and the Burner Peculiar

You have probably noticed that a Pilot Country Home Acetylene burner is shaped like the letter "Y." And that the little gas openings in the arms of the burner are only pin hole size. So small they let out only half of a cubic foot of Acetylene in an hour.

You might leave one of these Acetylene burners open by accident all day—and even then there wouldn't be gas enough in the air of the room to enable you to set fire to it if you tried.

As a matter of fact, you would have to leave the burner open fully three days and nights in a room twelve by fourteen, with windows and doors closed tight, before there would be any fire or explosion whatever. And the chance of your leaving a burner open that long is not worth considering. The pungent odor of the escaping gas would be certain to attract attention in a few seconds.

Insurance reports say that in a list of 10,000 recent fires and accidents caused by illuminants, 890 were charged to the misuse and abuse of electricity, kerosene, gasoline and city gas, and only ten to the misuse and abuse of Acetylene. That's why the engineers of the National Insurance Board have endorsed Acetylene. They say it is safer than all illuminants it is rapidly displacing. You should use home made Acetylene yourself to light your house and barns and to cook your meals.

All the facts and figures are in our illustrated catalogue which we send on request. Address
