Wood Used for Putty.

A refinement in yacht construction, introduced last year by Fife in the construction of Shamrock, consists in the substitution of a thirs slip of wood, known as "elly feather," for yutty, in stopping the seams after they have been caulked. The "teather" is covered with very tenselous give, strean hard home into the seams and left to dry. After the addes are planed off a remarkably smooth surface is offer a remarkably smooth surface is offer a remarkably smooth surface is offer a remarkably smooth surface in one pleca. This method has the firther awastage that there is no caulking to work out when the vessel is being heavily strained.—Scientic American.
