Woman's Nature

It Is Less-Sensitive Than That of Man

By RAYMOND BLATHWAYT,
English Essayist.

ARE men more sensitive than women? Of course they are! What a foolish question! It is demonstrated every day, all over the world, and in a hundred different ways. And that from youth up in either sex. Is there anything on earth, for instance, more sensitive, more delicate-minded than a well-bred published boy of 11? Compare him, with his shy reticence, his curious sensitiveness, his innate modesty, with a girl of the same class, age and the same age. Nor is the superior sensitiveness of man in any way a reflection on his manhood. A woman's lack of sensitiveness is due often to innate coarseness and phlegmatic quality of character.

A man's sensitiveness is a part of his organization, which renders his power of perception infinitely wider and more subtle than in the case of the majority of women. A man's changes and chances of this mortal life come without mystery and depart without reflection on their part.

No wonder that Mahomet believed that woman was without a soul. Let us thank God all the more for his charming body.

At the same time femininity, which probably comes as a protection and a benefaction to women in the somewhat arduous role they are called upon to play through life, has been well said that no man could ever go through the horrors of a woman, and any riding-master will tell you that women "freak" far less than men as a rule. That may be partly owing to the fact that they have no imagination, and therefore less fear of making themselves ridiculous. A man, for instance, could ever indulge in the vagaries of the imagination. His sense of humor would prevent him from so indulging in a matter, in much the same way that his indubitable superior sense of humor renders a woman's petty meannesses unbecomingly and impossible to him.

Partly because the man's mind is essentially more refined his appreciation of what is refined is far keener, immeasurably more delicate. In social limitations, for instance, a woman will frequently be more imposed upon by a dusty exterior than will a man, who knows intuitively when he is in the presence of a highly bred man. A woman, however well-bred herself, frequently is not.

A man's sympathy and broadness of heart is often more easily aroused than a woman's. As a striking instance of this, Harry De Windt, the well-known explorer, told me when he traveled for a thousand miles over the snowy slopes of Siberia with a convoy of political exiles of both sexes, and he frequently saw men, after hearing an air song which reminded them of their far-off lives at home, burst into uncontrollable sobbing, while the women would sit by, impassively, and complacently continue munching their kachka, or small loaves of bread, utterly unmoved and unimpressed by the poignant pathos of the moment.

And yet who, after all, would have a woman different from what she actually is?

Do You Approve of Business Enterprise?

Perhaps there are times when you feel that some of the business men of the town are not progressive enough. Ingrained in your nature is an admiration for the "hustler," for the person who does things, who improves whatever he touches.

You admire the merchant who, in brief space, takes a moribund store and makes it glow with life, a credit to the town. You are sure that, if we had more such men, the town would benefit amazingly.

A careful observer once noted the coincidence that most large cities were located on the banks of rivers. It is equally certain that most large stores "happen" to be enterprising advertisers.

In fact, aggressive advertising is the one infallible test of enterprise in a merchant. It stamps him progressive, alive, wise. All other "signs of life" about a store are misleading if a store is not aggressively advertised. The merchant knows this.

This editorial is to urge all those people who believe in progressiveness, in enterprise, to be consistent, to patronize the progressive and enterprising stores. The safe test is the store's advertising. You can buy advertised things and know that you are helping to make enterprise worth while, and know too that you are saving money for yourself. You can buy of the non-advertising merchant if you want to encourage and reward non-progressiveness in business, as well as to run the risk of securing for yourself a very doubtful bargain. Progressive people should patronize progressive merchants.

Export Only Finished Products

By a Western Manufacturer.

Not only ought prudence to be used in the consumption of the country's natural products, but the possibility of a double saving lies in working up these raw materials and exporting the manufactured articles rather than the original iron or wood or other unimproved products.

Broadly stated, the proposition is this: When we were in new country and our industrial life was that of a colony it was impossible to export the riches that nature had treasured up on this continent. Our population has increased enormously and we must aim to get into a position where we can export instead of products.

Every child that is born in the country brings two hands with it, but its parents do not add to the store of nature. When we export petroleum, lumber, iron and other materials, we are taking something from the wealth of the country.

In exporting highly finished products containing quality labor we are placing into the foreign markets the labor of our people that increases directly with every increase in population. I have heard professors of political economy in Germany say: "Let us buy our raw material abroad and export them in a highly finished state. We shall then gain a double advantage, the one in that we do not deplete our natural stores, and the other in this, that then our people will be able to rise to a higher standard of living, for those who do quality work are better paid."

Wonders of the Voice

By J. MOUNT BLEYER, M. D.,
Consulting Physician, Metropolitan Opera House, N. Y.

A great voice is a gift, and not even its possessor can tell whence it comes or how it is constructed. The singer finds that she is born with this wonderful machine, and must then learn how to use it. Tetrazzini has the wonderful formation of the larynx and the cords which make for a superb voice, but she also has a method. This getting up some morning and discovering that you are a singer is the rarest non-sense. The woman may be born with the vocal cords or strings, but something besides strings are needed, notably the brain with which to control the proper muscles with which to produce the proper tones. And a woman may have the cords without the quality. No two voices are alike, though they may be built exactly the same way, just as no two pianos or violins have the same tone until they are tightened and tuned and toned down to each other.
