MAKING HIS EASTER BUNNY MIND

The Independence of Mrs. Waters' An Easter Story

By C. A. AIKEN.

(Copyright, 1915, by American Press Association.)

WAS thinking of a sociable way to try to get some money to get the church painted by Easter. I suppose you have noticed how dreadfully shabby it is getting to be.

Mrs. Oscar Holmes, the banker's wife and spokesman of the committee of three, had her little book and pencil out.

"The church needs more'n a coat of paint. It needs more grace and grumpin'." Mrs. Waters said almost angrily. "No, I don't think you need to count on me for anything."

The people of Progress had learned that when Mrs. Waters said "no" she usually meant it. "She's so queer, so independent, you know," the ladies said when they got out of hearing distance. "I don't believe for a minute it's stinginess, it's independence."

"No, it's not stinginess, I know that," Mrs. Holmes said, "because when we were packing the missionary box and everybody was bringing second hand stuff to put in it she wouldn't give us a thing; said she didn't believe in giving old clothes away and calling it charity, or giving to the Lord and trying to get credit on a report for it."

She said she'd write the missionary's wife a letter and put it in the box. And would you believe it, she put a whole dollar's worth of postage stamps and a ten dollar bill in that letter, and we never would know a thing about it if the missionary's wife hadn't written back to the society."

Since the Waters family had moved to Progress, five years before, Mrs. Waters had certainly earned the reputation of being independent—and well, "queer." The first experience the Progress people had of her "queerness" was when she refused to borrow and lend on their knees to sell the Lord about.

"No, indeed," she said, "I ain't that kind of a woman. I never did believe in the plan. You lend me your stew kettle and I'll lend you my frying pan."

And yet often after this sharp tongued lady had been cooking the children might be seen carrying some little delicacy to old bedridden Mrs. Fraser, their neighbor across the way said that Mrs. Waters had made a little omission, and sent it over to a crippled child.

ble? Not a bit of it! He's told them plain enough how to go about such things. Nothin' could be plainer than what he's said about the tithing. Come to think about it, Ezra, how much have we got in that tithing box?"

"I guess there is a right smart little sum," Ezra answered, "but, you know, that little Indian girl's schoolin' will be comin' due soon. We always pay it 'long about this time."

"At the close of this meeting," the preacher announced at the Thursday night prayer meeting, "there will be a meeting of the Ladies' society to discuss plans for the coming Easter festival."

Before they could get well turned around Mrs. Johnson Pepper, the president of the Ladies' society, said:

"The meeting will please come to order," she said briskly. "The object of this meeting is thoroughly understood. I presume, but in case there may be some here who were not at the preliminary meeting I'll explain that the church is in very shabby looking and we'd decided to paint it before the summer folks got here for another season. We are going to have a sociable to try to raise the money."

"I'd like to ask," said Mrs. Waters, rising to her feet, "if it's the opinion of this meetin' that the Lord wants us to have this affair to patch up his house?"

"Why, there's surely no harm in holdin' a sociable," said the president. "Tain't that," said Mrs. Waters.

"Tain't that at all. If the people want to get together every week to enjoy themselves I'm willing they shall do it right in the church if they want to. But for my part I don't believe in spendin' much on patchin' up this old place when it's locked up 102 hours a week, and open'd six."

But it kind o' hurts me to think we've got to save ourselves and expose our poverty before the world by goin' out our sellin' stuff to get a new coat of paint for the Lord's house. You know that the Lord said the church was his bride, and do you know I don't believe the Lord would be a bit pleased to see his bride a shabby one in a church frequented by folks for a new coat of paint."

Don't believe it, nor Ezra don't either. We both think the Lord ought to have a brand new house here in Progress, a house that would be the envy of all the 102 hours out of every 108. We've been readin' about that church in Philadelphia where they have kindergartens and reading rooms and kitchens and little recommodations, and we want a church like that here in Progress, one for old and young, that will be open seven days in the week and till 10 at night. Ezra and me'll give the first hundred and the last hundred dollars if the people'll build that kind of a church."

"And to think," said Mrs. Oscar Holmes when the week before the Easter of the following year, she was showing a friend around and discussing her plans for the opening of the new Progress Institutional church, "that any of us was ever mean and unkind enough to say stinky about Mrs. Waters!"

"This is the ladies' room,"—pushing back a folding door—"this is for the men. This other room is for the kindergartens in the daytime, and the bigger children will play games on these little tables in the evening. This is the reading room, and this is the kitchen. Isn't that a lovely parlor? Mrs. Waters says there's nothin' about the church gives her more genuine satisfaction than this kitchen."

"Bless her old heart! If it hadn't been for her we wouldn't have this church. But, then, she certainly is queer."

Expensive Easter Eggs. In Austria eggs are given as presents at Easter, and the emperor presents a great number of them to various people. They are generally composed of silver or gold, mother-of-pearl or bone, and often contain some useful present, a piece of jewelry or some little knickknack intended to give pleasure to the recipient.
