"What is to be done with the war babies?" The question is stirring Europe, and new American women are taking it up. Thousands of the babies are illegitimate: Heptimatize them," asya Carrie Chapman Catt. "Nothing can ever make reparation for these terrible wrongs," says Mrs. James Lees Laidhw. "None of our business," says Mrs. Arthur M. 1962ge. "Preposterous to call any baby illegitimate," says Mrs. Inez Mill dland Boissevain.

MORE CANADIAN TROOPS TO THE FRONT

Metagama leaving Montreal with 3,000 Canadian troops.

The Dominion's answer to the Canadian losses at Ypres, even as the heard casualty lists were being published, was to hurry more troops to the front. The first part of the answer was seen when the palatial new liner from the proposed proposed to the maiden voyage, etc. The common commandered when she struck Montreal on her maiden voyage, left that city late last week crammed with troops for the firing line.

A BROKEN IDOL.

"Has the paymaster spoke yet."
One grimy giant stoking the trace of the control of the control would take him to his home in Walton, where most of Ransom's men lived.

Usually the time occupied by his journey was given over to his invention, but to-night a new thought chased the other. Breaking a woman's heart: What absurd nonsense! Why, Maggie was just as eager as himself. There would be more than the house and walked himself. There would be more than the house and very ship in Liverson carried Lesile's accoring gear. The car drew up with a jork. Ronald walked up the street to his home—a little house, one of a row of other little house, one of a row of other little house, can the replica of the other. Ronald Lesile's the first with his latch-key, and groped in the gloom of the narrow, unlighted hall. The Lesile's house had a kitchen and a front parlor. Bigh were usually lighted up before the return of the head of the family. Ronald stumbled toward the kitchen is they dear that also was unlittle took up as her hushand came in. This, too, was unusual. Maggie Lesile always met her lad on the threshold of his hong.

"What's the matter?" sald Ronald. "Why lant the gas lighted?"

"We haven't paid: the rate," sald Maggie in a dull volce. "They'e cut it of."

Maggie in a dull voice. "They're cut to of."

To do jher justice, she tried hard to keep 'reproach out of her voice. Ronald was a good husband, and she was as groud of his invention—the great invention that was going to do such 'weders'—as he was himself. But when you're two children who want shelter and food and fire, and life in the state of the state he said.

"I don't know." said Maggie.
"He's been feverish. I'd take him to the doctor if I could."
They looked at each other. They to trend. Only the fool never repeats of his folis;"

He stood a moment in the darkuses, and light came to him. It was a new and different Ronald Lesile who entered the house on his return. He climbed the stairs again; the light was still burning in the little front room, a woman still knell he was a new fear. Had the Angel of Death touched the door-post even while he had been away? Entering, he lifted his wife from the ground. His voice was tender when he spoke.

"Margaret!" he said, "Meg! My wife!"
It was the little tender name of their courting days. Maggle's arms stole round his necks he full the court of the said of the said."

"He is better," she whispered. Her voice broke in a sob. "He fell aleep soon after you left. Rooald, forgive me all I said."

Dear human love—that is a man's roward here for every lost hope and dead ambition. Ronald Lesile comforted the sobbling woman in his arm, and the son the solid of the solid."

She looked up at him; he could see that he regret was deeper than his own.

"Oh, Honald," she said, "it was the treasure of the world to you!" "God has been good to me," he said. "The treasure of the yorld is bert!"—London Answers.
