Heart Disease Almost Fatal to Young Girl

My daughter, when thirteen years old, was stricken with heart trouble. She was so bad we had to place her bed near a window so she could get her breath. One doctor said, "Poor child, she is likely to fall dead any time." I told me Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy at once. Lucy and Tom, when I took a great many bottles, but she is now, as I told you, so I tried it, and she began to improve. ## A Very Naughty Girl

By LOUISE B. CUMMINGS

Mrs. Ferguson was John Ferguson's second wife. Lucy Ferguson was her stepdaughter. The former was also stepmother to a son of John Ferguson, who had been wild, lust quarreled with his father and left home. Since his departure he had never been heard from.

John Ferguson had brought his daughter Lucy up with the understanding that she should marry a wealthy man. Lucy had her own notions about that, but said nothing. Her father communicated his idea on this subject to his wife and charged her to keep an eye on his daughter's associates, seeing that she did not become involved with some poverty stricken young fellow who would give her a life of hardship.

Mr. Ferguson was a very busy man and was much away from home. This made it especially essential that his wife should look after Lucy. One day before starting on a long trip he charged Mrs. Ferguson not to permit Lucy to receive any one young man at the house unless she had been a month during his absence and not to allow her to go out with any young man at all. Lucy was in an adjoining room during the giving of these instructions with her ear to the keyhole in a connecting door.

For a couple of weeks after her father's departure Lucy appeared to be perfectly contented at home. No men called on her, and she never went out in the evening. There had been no more sympathy between her and Mrs. Ferguson than there usually is between stepmother and daughter, but during this period of her father's absence Lucy evinced so much feeling for her father's wife as to quite win her heart. "Lucy," she wrote her husband, "is much changed. She seems content with me only for a companion and has taken to calling me 'mamma.' You have no need to worry about her. There is no one at all attentive to her." One afternoon when Mrs. Ferguson and Lucy were in the sewing room the doorbell rang. Lucy went downstairs and opened the door. Then Mrs. Ferguson heard the following dialogue: Lucy—Oh, my goodness gracious! Man's Voice—Do you know me, Lucy? Lucy—Know you? Indeed I do. The Voice—Who am I? Lucy—Why, Tom, of course. Oh, Tom, how could you be so cruel as to go away as you did? The Voice—Deserved to be shot. But I've changed. I've come home repentant and will try to make up to my misdeeds. Do you think father will forgive me?

Lucy seemed hopeful as to this, but said she would much depend upon how the matter would be broken to their father. He was away at the time, and if he knew that his son had returned she believed he would write to have him sent away. But if he waited till he had returned and Lucy should announce the arrival of the prodigal, at the same time imploring for him her father's forgiveness, she believed she could obtain it.

"But you must meet our new mamma," she added. "She's perfectly lovely, and I'm sure she will help us."

So Lucy took Tom up into the sewing room and introduced him to the stepmother. He was dressed very shabbily and seemed to have had a hard time of it. Mrs. Ferguson, who was a kind hearted woman, pitied him. Besides, she knew that her husband had grieved over the conduct of his only son, and if a reconciliation could be effected it would be pleasant for all concerned. She invited her stepson to take up his quarters in his former home, but Tom declared that he would on no account do that till after he had received his father's forgiveness.

So it was agreed among the three that Tom should make himself at home in the house during the day, but should occupy a room elsewhere. Mrs. Ferguson acceded to Lucy's plan that the husband and father should not be notified of the son's return till Lucy broke the news to him after his arrival.

Never were there a more affectionate brother and sister. Mrs. Ferguson several times surprised them sitting in close proximity, and every time Tom came in or went out they kissed. This continued till the evening of Mr. Ferguson's arrival. He came unexpectedly and was received by his wife, Lucy and Tom. Lucy and Tom waited before him, and Lucy said pleadingly: "Papa, forgive me. This is my husband. We were married a week ago."

What Mr. Ferguson said in reply is not necessary to this story. What Mrs. Ferguson said was: "Oh, heavens, what have I done?" Mr. Ferguson regarded his wife sternly. He had relied upon her to keep his daughter from an alliance of her own choosing. He asked some questions as to how the young man had effected an entrance to the family circle, whereupon Lucy confessed the trap she had laid for her stepmother in introducing her lover as her brother and took all the responsibility upon herself.

The couple were finally forgiven—indeed, there is nothing else to do in such cases—and all ended happily. The real Tom came back later on, but it took a good deal of time to convince his stepmother that he was not an impostor. It must be acknowledged that Lucy was a very naughty girl, but how can a girl choose a husband for herself in opposition to her parents without being naughty?

TOLD UNDER OATH

The grand treasurer of one of the local churches, who also happens to be employed as one of the check receivers at a local bank, is up against a mighty funny proposition, in his dual position, as an official of two institutions, and it all happened because someone back in the dark ages learned the alluring art of making counterfeit money.

Someone donated a leaden dollar to the church.

Now as a conscientious and dutiful church official, this young man naturally was willing, nay anxious to garner all shekels possible into the church treasury, but also as a conscientious and trustworthy bank employee, he was in all honor bound to accept no bad money for deposit at the bank, which looked suspicious, or tainted with lead. Much has been said of tainted money, and although some cases are on record of the refusal of tainted money by churches, this is not one of them.

The dollar, of silver, or rather of lead, came neatly encased in its little envelope via the regular channels and was given to the church treasurer by the church secretary, and accepted by him as such, but shortly after rejected by the bank employee, who as stated before is one and the same person.

And there the matter rests, with the treasurer much in doubt as to his true duty. On one hand he is compelled to accept the contribution to the church—on the other he is compelled to reject it for the bank.

And in the meantime an effort is being made to find the identity of the donor, while the leaden beauty has been returned to the church secretary for safe keeping.

Note by the editor—During an ordinary week I could have found a much shorter and simpler way of writing the above news note, but this happened to be vacation week, with a scarcity of news resulting. Should such a thing ever occur in the future and I trust it will not, the mention of it will read about as follows: "Some unknown person, unintentionally dropped a bum dollar in the church contribution box, which Edgar Pierce refused to accept at the bank, and which has been returned to the church secretary, Mrs. T. H. McGee."

FOR SALE—1/4 acre farm, 2 miles west of Farmington on Grand River road, 7 room house, wood house, and garage. Price for quick sale $1,075 and worth double. Enquire at Enterprise office.
