SOME WILL DISBELIEVE THIS

That Fair Girl Graduate Neglected Familiar Phrase Is Too Much to Take on Faith.

Confronted by eager friends and relatives in the auditorium the fair young girl graduate walked forth to the center of the platform to deliver her commencement oration. Everyone expected her to strew the wild flowers of rhetoric around the building with a lavish hand and they were not disappointed. Beginning almost in the Garden of Eden, she brilliantly traced the great events of history and endeavored to point the lesson that lay hidden behind each. She dragged poor Julius Caesar from his mausoleum and gleefully juggled him across the Rubicon again, helped Horatio make good his long suit at the bridge and even endeavored to portray where Napoleon Bonaparte had erred.

Coming down the home stretch the talented young lady breezed along under wraps.

"Now, my classmates," she said in conclusion, "we have reached the parting of the ways. We must now show the stuff of which we are made and get out in the world and hustle. Let us put forth all our energies to make our efforts a success, thereby repaying our proud forebears for the many sacrifices they have made that we might be scientifically equipped for the herculean struggle on which we must embark."

With these fitting words, the fair graduate brought her valedictory to a close. And never once did she proclaim to an unimpassioned public that "Beyond the Alps lies Italy!"—New York World.

RETURN TO OLD FAVORITE

Observant Cigar Dealer Records Almost Universal Habit He Has Observed in His Patrons.

"I understand," said the cigar dealer, as he took advantage of a leisure moment to pass a word with one of his customers, "that the people who write books about various 'ologies' speak a good deal of reverence to type. I can't give the scientific definition of that term, but I've often thought that a man in my business sees a practical application of it a good many times in a day."

"I have noticed that ninety-nine men out of a hundred, though they say they are willing to experiment on tobacco lines, can be counted on to come back to their first loves—revert to 'em, I should say. Take the devotees of a certain brand of cigars. About once in ten or twelve years I get elated on to something else, quite likely a cheaper kind, which he'll try to persuade himself is just as good. 'It's funny,' he will say to his friends, 'that I never discovered this cigar before.' He'll talk about it, and smoke it, and then in about a week he'll drift in and ask in a way a bit shame-faced for some of the old kind. I'll put the familiar box before him and watch the affectionate touch that he gives the cigars."

Why Not Select Your Guest?

"I wish people who haven't minds of their own would come to a realization of the bother that they are to their friends and would develop a little initiative on their own account," said a man who had been entertaining a visitor to dinner. "Maybe it's only a mistake idea of politeness, but anyhow it's a nuisance to be entertaining a person at the club and have him utterly without ideas as to what he wants to eat and drink. You ask him and he says he'll name it to you, which is exactly what you don't want him to do. How can you divine his tastes, I'd like to know? What appeals to you, very likely won't be him, and you know he'll know it. But your selections from the menu are always nice with the comment, 'That's very good,' or 'you couldn't suit me better.' And so you go through the meal in a bit-miserable fashion that certainly gets on the nerves of the host. The next time I run up against that kind of man, I'm just going to sit back and let him do the entire ordering."
