GETTING A START

By NATHANIEL C. FOWLER, Jr.

(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.) JACK OF ALL TRADES.

Friendship does not, and cannot, exist without a community of interest.

We select our friends, our real friends, because they think as we do, like the things which we like, and are interested in what interests us.

Likes do not repel, and dislikes do not attract, in every case by any manner of means, notwithstanding the old and somewhat accepted adage to that effect.

Friends may differ in detail, but never are fundamentally apart in character. They love to be together, to work together, to play together. Neither tires of the other. They have a common interest and occupy a mutual ground.

Ninety per cent of unhappy and unprofitable marriages are due to the fact that they are born of sentiment and the imitation of love, instead of being founded upon comradeship, interest and respect. It has led more people astray, and been responsible for more trouble, than any other element in the composition of human affairs.

It is difficult for one to know whether or not a certain person is suitable for him to marry, if he depends upon sentimental feeling or allows himself to be guided by him. If, on the other hand, both parties are good comrades, liking the same things, having a strong mutual interest; and, if they are contented when together, irrespective of the affectionate words of courtship, it is pretty safe for them to marry, even though they may not have what is commonly called love for each other.

In order that I may not be misunderstood, let me say that love, if it is pure, is an absolutely safe guide to follow; but, as comparatively few of us can separate love from sentiment, it is not so likely to know whether we are under the influence of the genuine article.

It is, therefore, safer to depend upon that which is surer, namely, comradeship, for if the love it will breed and develop love; but sentiment, if not based wholly on true love, does not necessarily carry comradeship or give or hold a community of interest. No man should marry a woman unless he feels perfectly happy with her before marriage under all conditions and circumstances; unless he loves her at play, at work, at his home, and in all the conditions of life, and unless he is completely contented when in her company, with no desire to be away from her or to have any interest which he does not want her to share with him.

If he can be happier at his club, among his man friends, than he would be indoors or out of doors with his intended wife, there is something the matter with him, or with her, or with both of them.

I do not mean to say that a man should be unhappy or discontented when temporarily away from his fiancée or his wife; but, unless before marriage he is happier and more contented with the woman than without her, and he is willing to make her a partner in everything, there is something that comradeship, that community of interest, which is sure to kill all the love there may be between them, and result in disaster.

If men would select their mates as they choose their intimate friends, and avoid the same judgment in so doing, and if women would do likewise, the percentage of unhappy marriages would be reduced to the minimum.

Stay Elephants With Spears. The Jeng people, an African tribe, are remarkably brave, and they recently killed two man-eating lions with spears alone. This means that the first man attacking the animal is killed to a certainty before their companions are enabled to rush in and despatch the wounded animal.

They also hunt elephants in the very primeval and untrampled forests of dropping weighted spears upon the elephant from branches of trees. These spears remain fixed, and the elephant exists for days until it is exhausted, can no longer resist, and spears which are embedded in its side. The country is full of ivory, large quantities of which are hidden or buried and will probably never be found.

In one little village the people killed 15 hippos in three days simply by throwing spears at the huge creatures from frail dugout canoes.

Situation a Puzzle. Propagation of small fish of the innumerable minnow family in Crater Lake is a unique problem, for occupying the crater is an extinct volcano, the lake has no shallows, and no streams enter or leave it in which small fish may find refuge. Yet the supply of natural fish food must be considerable, and the temperature in this lake is to remain at its present excellence. Minnows must be brought from distant waters under adverse conditions.

There is a man in my town, in your town, and in every town, who can do about everything well and nothing very well. If he is a bookkeeper, he is a fairly good one, and he would not be a complete failure selling goods behind the counter or on the road. If he is a stenographer, his shorthand notes are legible, and he can usually read them if it is necessary to read them. If he is a practicing physician, he diagnoses with ordinary accuracy, and is familiar with accepted remedies, cures, and treatments. If he is a lawyer, he can make out a bill of sale, or a mortgage, or any other legal document, that will probably hold, but a great corporation employs a better man.

Most of these men would be fairly proficient in any calling, and the chances are that all of them know how to do several things well; many of them can do many things well. They pride themselves upon their versatility, are good citizens, and earn respectable livings. They make pretty good husbands and fairly good fathers. They are usually industrious; but, and this BUT looms large on this page and in the affairs of life—BUT they have no real definite, solid, marketable skill. They are trustworthy only to a limited degree. They are, or can be, jacks of all trades, or of any trade. They climb one, two, or three rungs of the ladder, and then they start, neither falling back nor advancing.

I am not asking any young man to so devote himself to one thing that he will be ignorant of everything else. No man should have an eminent snobism should not be able to hit a nail on its head often than to miss it; but, if he prides himself upon his mechanical ability, his proficiency will come to him at a sacrifice of his more important science.

It has been said that no man can do more than one thing very well. The great successes of life are those who specialize, who attempt to do one thing better than all other things, who make that one thing more important than all else, and not necessarily neglecting the little duties, not being wholly ignorant of common affairs. They are known not by the many things they can do, but by the one thing they can do better than the majority of those in the same calling.

Don't be a Jack of All Trades. The Jack of All Trades is the Jack of Every Trade. Do something better than you can do anything else. Build up a reputation around that one thing, a proficiency which will safeguard your interests and at the same time give you a reputation which means money and fame.

Bumper Grain Crops

Good Markets—High Prices Prizes Awarded to Western Canada for Wheat, Oats, Barley, Alfalfa and Grasses

The winnings of Western Canada at the Soil Products Exposition at Denver were easily made. The most important being the prizes for Wheat and Oats and sweep stake on Alfalfa.

No less important than the splendid quality of Western Canada's wheat and other grains, is the excellence of the cattle and fatness on the grasses of that country. A recent shipment of cattle to Chicago topped the market in that city for quality and price.

Western Canada produced in 1915 one-third as much wheat as all the United States, or over 300,000,000 bushels.

Canada in proportion to population has a greater exportable surplus of wheat this year than any country in the world, and at present prices you can figure out the revenue for the producer.

In Western Canada you will find good markets, splendid schools, exceptional social conditions, perfect climate and other great attractions. There is no war tax on land and no conscription.
