Their Desire.

The prisoners asked that the warden give them permission to form a club.

"It is granted," said the head of the jail. "What kind of a club is it to be?"

"An outing club," said they.

Their Name is Legion.

Little Lemuel—Say, paw, what are the three graces?

Paw—Faith, Hope and Charity, son. Little Lemuel—And what are the disgraceful ways?

Paw—Oh, they are too numerous to mention.

Worth Trying.

DeBorum—If there is anything that will make a fool appear wise, it is silence.

Miss Canby—No doubt you are right, Mr. DeBorum. You, at least, could lose nothing by trying the experiment.

In the Asylum.

"What's the matter with the queer patient over there who is going through such queer antics?"

"He's crazy on the subject of training pets, and he thinks he's trying to make a moon dog bark at a sunfish."

Newspaper Advertising

is becoming a necessity in modern merchandising, and all classes of merchants are coming to a realization of this fact. The housewife also looks over the columns of her paper before going on a shopping or marketing expedition; in fact everyone is beginning to find interest in the advertising columns of the papers they read, and it is no uncommon occurrence to see a man or woman turn to the advertising columns first upon picking up a paper.

The non-advertising country merchant deplores the fact that the mail order houses and the big city stores are making inroads on his patronage. How Do They Do It? Do they send salesmen into the rural districts to solicit trade? Do they simply open their places of business and wait for customers? They do not. They obtain all—not a part, but ALL—of their patronage by the use of printer's ink. They advertise. The average local merchant, does not seem to realize, even with this great object lesson before him, that the means employed by these concerns are also at his disposal. Through the medium of the printed word they tell the people what they have to sell. The majority of the village merchants do not.

The non-advertising merchant frequently advances the argument that everyone knows where his store is and what he has to sell. He is wrong there. Everyone does not know what he has to sell. If he doubts this statement let him compare his present stock with that of five years, three years or even one year ago, and note the many new things he has on his shelves, new things that are the product of inventive genius or of changing fashions. He keeps abreast the market changes, but all his customers do not. Hence they do not know what he has to sell.

THE TIME TO HUSTLE FOR BUSINESS IS HERE, AND THE FELLOW TO HUSTLE IS YOU.
