

Sorrow comes to all

The great sorrow must come to us all. While we insist that the funeral shall be well appointed and conducted along up-to-date lines we also must make sure that we are not overcharged. One certain method of accomplishing this result is to put us in charge of the arrangements.

CROWDING OUT THE SMALL MERCHANTS.

A great economic question is going to be brought squarely before the American people within the next few months, and upon the determination of the issues raised by the so-called Stevens' Bill, pending in Congress, depends in a very large measure the fate of the small dealer, and especially those in the smaller towns, in the unequal struggle that they are waging for existence against the great city department stores and mail order houses. Every person who has kept his eyes open, must have observed that for some reason the big city merchants have been gaining ground, while the tradesmen in the interior have found the struggle growing constantly harder. The records of post offices and express money order issues, and bank drafts purchased, clearly show that great sums of money that should be used in trading at home, are going to the mail order houses in the large cities. And the department stores in the great centers are monopolizing the trade, and the little stores are becoming fewer and fewer. This condition is attributed to "cut-throat competition," or price cutting, and from every part of the country has come a demand for the enactment of a federal statute that will enable manufacturers of staple articles to fix a price on their goods and compel the retailing at a standard figure, no matter where the goods are sold. The Federal Trade Commission is working in this direction, and the indications are that there is bad weather ahead for the handful of city interests that have been driving out the smaller dealer, and growing opulent and arrogant at the expense of the country merchants.

In a number of the rural schools the pupils are testing the seed grains for the farmers in the district, thus giving the agricultural classes practical work. This would be a good plan for adoption in all schools.

"This is the time for cool heads," says one of our representatives in congress. Some of his colleagues seem to think it time for "cool feet."

When a married man goes home hungry late at night he generally gets a piece of "tongue and roast."

KNOW WHERE TO FIND THEM

War Authorities Keep Effective Track of All the Soldiers Under Their Control.

It is doubtful whether any foreign war office follows with an accuracy greater than that displayed by the United States war department the movements of its officers. The following is an interesting case in point: A young army officer who had seen service in this country and in the East was once with a small scouting party in Arizona. After two weeks in the desert his squad came to a railway near a small station. Within ten minutes a telegram from Washington was brought to him by the station agent. It asked if the officer wished to be transferred to one of the new artillery regiments then forming.

He answered by telegram that he would be glad to enter either of them. Then with his squad he set off again across the desert.

It was six days later when they again struck the railway, this time 80 miles from the point at which they had previously crossed it. But the officer's reply from the war department was awaiting him. It had been telegraphed to every station within two hundred miles.

A more striking instance of accuracy occurred after the same officer's transfer to the East. He was traveling home on leave and, as the regulations require, had notified the department of the hour and probable route of his journey. After he had been on the train for eight hours at a small station the conductor entered with a telegram, asking if anyone of his name was on board. On opening the telegram the officer found that it ordered him to detached duty.

Exactness of detail could not be carried much further. This war department knew the whereabouts of a second lieutenant even when he was traveling on leave of absence.

We would like to secure the services of a young lady to help us in gathering local news items around town.
