FALL PLANTING OF ROSES

By PRISCILLA PAKE.

Fall planting of roses may be done in the latter part of October or early in November, or even as late as the middle of December, with excellent results.

Roses planted in the fall, however, should be set deep and banked well with earth just before the ground freezes. It is also well to cover the soil about the plants with manure, which should not be removed until the middle of April, or until all danger from a severe frost is over, whereupon this dressing may be forked under.

When the rose plants are received from the nurseryman they should be unpacked as soon as they come to hand. Thereupon the tops and roots should be well sprinkled with water, after which they should be covered with burlap and placed in a shaded spot until ready to plant.

If the ground is not prepared when the plants arrive, it is advisable to put them in a shallow trench and cover the roots with loose soil until the ground can be put into a proper condition. The enrichment of the soil, however, should not only be made at the time of the preparation of the bed before planting, but in the spring of every year, for with such attention a bountiful supply of flowers may be expected every season.

When planting, spread the roots out carefully and do not cross them or crowd them. They should be placed well below the surface of the soil and arranged, as far as possible, in their natural position.

When the roots are covered the earth should be firmly pressed down upon them, particularly around the stem. If manure is put in the bottom of the hole it should not be allowed to come in contact with the roots.

After planting, the roses should be well cut back to a few buds, freely watered and protected for a few days if the sun is strong. After that they will have become thoroughly established.

If the ground is wet when the plants are received it is better to postpone the planting, as the soil is liable to become baked and the safety of the plants may be thus endangered.

During a dry season the rose requires plenty of water, and frequently soaking the bed with liquid manure will be beneficial. The moisture may also be conserved by abundant cultivation.

In the winter the roses should be protected with a good mulch, which is best done by covering the roots in December with coarse litter, or leaves, to about six inches in depth. If they may be covered with evergreen boughs of similar material.

But if the exposure is very great it is advisable to lay the plants down and cover them with earth, putting them to sleep, as it were, on the bosom of Mother Nature.

CLEMATIS A GOOD VINE

Clematis, paniculata, is one of our most popular vines. It seems entirely free from disease and is unusually hardy. Its foliage is attractive and its small white blossoms which completely cover the vine make a glorious spectacle over porches and pergolas.

One of its chief attractions is that it does not come into bloom until after all the other vines are faded and yellow. It is a rapid grower. Clematis must be planted in a soil of good loam, well drained. Give it protection of leaves in the winter.

THE WILD GRAPE VINE

To me the wild grape vine produces the sweetest odor of any plant in existence. The wild grape is a hardy vine, growing with scarcely any attention.

It can be made to cover a side fence as a dense hedge, or trained over trellis or up shade trees.

Young plants may be secured in almost any wood or along bushy fence rows. They are transplanted in late fall or winter.—E. V. B.
