

Farmington Boys Ride For Record

Let the college kids eat their coldish or stuff themselves into phone booths—five Farmington high school boys hope to set a record that requires genuine endurance.

The quietist is out to break the world bike-riding record. The world bicycling endurance record is 250 miles.

THE FARMINGTON youths set out at midnight last Friday to break this record. They have been pedaling day and night, through wind and rain and heat to accomplish their goal. And they're still pedaling.

One five expect to reach 251 miles by 10:01 a.m. Tuesday.

Just might go on all summer," According to Mrs. Purcell, neighborhood children have been out everyday roosting the boys on. The roosting section has also kept the bike-riders supplied with cookies and soft drinks and subdivision lights are left on at night so the team can see where it is pedaling.

At the moment, the riding is still in progress, but check The Enterprise & Observer to learn whether the world bicycling record will come to Farmington and five Farmington boys.

Pumping Pigeons
After the young of the pigeon hatch they are fed on "pigeon milk" — a unique substance secreted in the lining of the parent's crop — which is pumped into the mouths of the young. This is quite unlike any feeding process found elsewhere among birds.
