

Dirty Harry scores in 'Magnum Force'

By JAN WILLIAMS

Staring down the barrel of a .44 Magnum is unnerving, even when the gun and its holder are on film.

But it's an effective way to introduce viewers to "Magnum Force," another Dirty Harry sequel starring Clint Eastwood and Hal Holbrook.

Eastwood is Harry Callahan, a sharp-shooter lieutenant with the San Francisco police department. In this film, he's badgered by Lt. Briggs (Hal Holbrook) for using his gun too much. Consequently he has been moved from homicide to stake-outs.

He makes the move back, however, when top criminals in the city begin dropping off like flies — but not before he prevents a store robbery and single-handedly recovers a hijacked plane.

Back on the homicide squad, he gives his attention to the recurring murders of well-known criminals who have "legally" escaped the law.

Director Ted Post has effectively pieced the film together. It's fast moving and despite overworked scenes — seems every cops and robbers movie has a "French Connection" chase and "God-father" bloody murders —

MAGNUM FORCE now showing at Terrace

can still hold your attention to the end.

The engrossing thing about this film is that when you think you've figured it out, you find you haven't. Perhaps you're wondering about the title. The victims got it with a Magnum, but it would kill the suspense to tell you why. I'll leave that to Dirty Harry.

WHEN CLINT EASTWOOD points his .44 Magnum, he doesn't miss in "Magnum Force," now showing at the Terrace.

Ballet company will perform

Maurice Bejart's Ballet of the 20th Century, will perform Monday, Jan. 28, at 8:30 p.m. in the Music Hall Center, 350 Madison, Detroit.

This Belgium-based ballet company has two qualities that have set it apart from more traditional companies: mass appeal and youth appeal. The company, the pride of Belgium and the toast of Europe, is now heralded in this country since ITT financed its first tour of the United States in 1971.

Tickets are available at Hudson's, Grinnell's and the Music Hall box office. Student and senior citizen rates are available.
