

"The Pajama Game"

New rules make "The Pajama Game" easier to play this season. Satiny versions of what you once wore to bed are being worn out and lingerie designers are finally coming up with new looks for evenings at home.

Designer Fernando Sanchez recreates the look of Harlow with silky, low-cut and boa-trimmed gowns. Then he switches to the crispness of cotton in a full-length caftan with matching long pants.

Many of his designs rely on wrap closures, letting you decide how daring you'll be.

But Doris Day, in the 1957 musical about the garment industry, was anything but daring in her baggy pj's.

The influence of evening gowns on bedtime garments is obvious. Spaghetti straps hold up gathered-at-the-bust gowns. Camisole tops are sewn onto long skirts. Pajamas abound.
