

"The Tall Blond Man With One Black Shoe"

Rounded toes and the brogue tassels in patent for spring

Fashion forecasts advise that being with only one shoe, and a black one at that, is really not the vogue unless you're absent-minded or in an extreme hurry.

"The Tall Blond Man with One Black Shoe" is a current French comedy which is unlike the current serious fashion trends in men's shoes.

Deadly serious are the retakes of the two-toned wing-tip in dark brown, navy and black with white.

Brogues, with their little tassels or large flaps so they resemble golf shoes, look appropriate with many of this spring's styles.

White shoes, unless they are lace-ups to go with those elegant white linen or silk suits, are definitely not something to consider—along with shiny shoes that aren't ox-blood or black.

Natural tanned colors abound in men's shoes. Textures are also natural in suedes.

Most important is the almost imminent death of the platform shoe for men. If you've been uncomfortable for a couple of seasons slip into a good old loafer with the Gucci trim and walk to your heart's content—in style.

Sibley's has the best-looking ideas in men's shoes today. Florsheim took superbly subtle styles and crafted them in crinkled patent leather. And now it's an easy walking, easy care story of aware fashion with all the ease of no-polish patent (just a wipe with a soft cloth does it). Fantastically contemporary. Thoroughly Florsheim! At Sibley's Now!
