

"Born Free"

What lions have to do with men's clothes can only be explained by the 1966 English movie "Born Free" and countless other desert and safari films from "The African Queen" starring Humphrey Bogart to "Trader Horn" with memorables like Duncan Renaldo, Edwina Booth and Harry Carey.

Those ubiquitous suits the gentlemen wore have maintained their place in the men's fashion world and with just as many pockets as the original safari suits way-back-when.

But they've taken a turn for the city, in some cases with switches from the classic khaki to gabardines, plaids, textured fabrics and some short Eisenhower-length jackets.

And the name's been changed—they're now called "walking suits," reflecting perhaps the energy crisis.

These suits should be worn with as much casualness—freedom—as one can muster. Open necked shirts whose collars are meant to overlap the jacket's collar, are a must. Turtleneck sweaters look especially good with the shorter cropped jackets.
