

Schoolcraft hosts safety seminar

Schoolcraft College will be the site of an all-day construction safety seminar sponsored by the State Construction Safety Institute in cooperation with the Michigan Department of Labor, Friday, April 26.

Private company and governmental construction supervisory personnel will be invited to participate in the seminar, which will be devoted to Michigan's new role in Occupational Safety and Health Act (OSHA) regulations.

The Livonia meeting is one of 27 being conducted in 20 cities to explain federal and state OSHA regulations, enforcement procedures, reporting requirements, inspections, and company safety programs.

The sessions run from 8 a.m. - 5 p.m., including lunch. The program is designed to interest managerial personnel for small construction firms, utilities supervisors, and governmental agencies involved in construction.

Lindsay Hayes, consultant in occupational and construction safety and former acting area director of the Michigan office of the U.S. Department of Labor, will serve as seminar director.

David Gardner, executive secretary of the Construction Safety Institute, said the seminars will review federal and state occupational safety and health laws, handling of violation citations, inspection procedures, and the relationship between enforcing agencies. Company safety programs, reporting and record-keeping, and accident procedures also will be discussed.

Registration fee of $40 will cover luncheon, materials and information kits.

Advance registration and information concerning the seminar schedule can be obtained from the Construction Safety Institute, Inc., 200 - B Mill Street, Lansing, 48933.
