Hunting the Tay-Sachs Carrier

Dr. Ralph Cash, chairman of pediatrics, Sinai Hospital, is one of 48 doctors, nurses and technicians voluntarily working in the Tay-Sachs screening program 10 a.m.-4 p.m. Sunday, June 23, and Sunday, June 30, at United Hebrew Schools on Twelve Mile Road, east of Lahser, Southfield. From small blood samples such as he is holding, doctors will be able to determine if couples or individuals of child-bearing age are carriers who could transmit the always fatal disease. Children born with Tay-Sachs disease are doomed to death by their fourth or fifth year.

Bubble bath excess can cause problems

Some parents think that a child's bubble bath is a great babysitter. Put the child in, finish the housework, read the newspaper or make a phone call.

Unfortunately though, over-use of the product can cause unwanted problems. Several years ago, after receiving reports that some children developed skin irritations after use, the Food and Drug Administration requested manufacturers to reduce the amount of detergent in the product.

Detergent makes the bubbles, but over-use of it can remove too much oil from the skin.

FDA and other government agencies are still receiving complaints of unwanted reactions. FDA says that one of the reasons for this is misuse of the product.

WHILE MANUFACTURERS may have lessened the amount of detergent, parents simply dump in more bubble bath to get plenty of bubbles.

FDA has this advice for parents before giving a child a bubble bath:

- Follow directions. Do not use more than recommended.
- Do not leave the child in the tub for a long period of time. A bubble bath should be treated like
