In the 1890's the automobile was considered a inerely weird contraption in the United States. Pea-let her relief on railroad, bicycles and corriages to get them where they wanted to go. Of course, we should also remember that in those days there was probably less then 200 miles of power load adequate to support a horseless carriage in the whole country. The Duryee brothers, Frank and Charles, designed the first car in the United States in the year 1893. The carburator in this early model was constructed from a perfume atomizer and on alcohol burner.

According to Jenkins, most of the players make their income not from playing polo, but rather from training their horses.

Polo horses range in age from four to 20 and take between six months and two years to train.

"We train the horse to be aggressive, balanced, stop quickly, and to come off their haunches," Jenkins said:

"Probably 75 per cent of polo is the horse. The old saying is you can't score without the ball; well, you can't get the ball without the horse."
