'Strapping' means delicate not husky when applied to fall footwear

Straps return for fall footwear

Remember when you were a kid and your thumbs and forefingers worked laboriously to buckle your foot into a strapped shoe? Well, your digital clumsiness may be gone but the strapped pump is back.

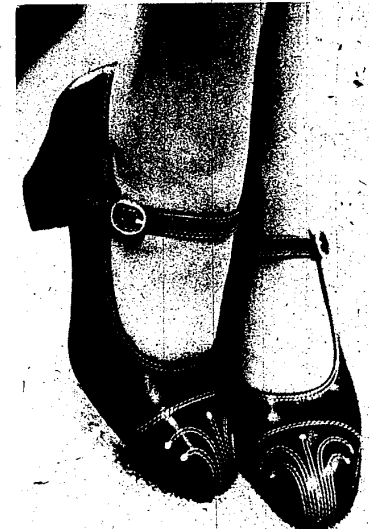

This fall, footwear will retrace those first schooldays by bringing back Mary Jane pumps, ankle straps and T-straps.

Platform shoes are now little more than relics in the archives of fashion.

Instead, delicate soles and higher heels are slimming ankles and lengthening legs wrapped in fall's longer, fuller skirts.

The neat, lightweight look suggests sling-backs for evening, cut-away arches for daytime and embroidery and contrasting leather trim for fun.

The soft streamlining of footwear demands a similar choice when it comes to handbags. "Envelope" shapes, frame bags, glove leather pouches and shoulder bags which work overtime as a clutch are good teammates with this season's shoes.

Ankle straps appear beneath longer, fuller skirts (Photographed by Douglas Bauman)
