

Trigere shows draped neckline

By MARY CONNELLY

Streaks of jeweled embroidery, folds of chiffon and loosely wrapped scarves pamper a woman's shoulders and neckline in Pauline Trigere's fall collection.

Shown at Saks Fifth Avenue, Troy, last week, the designs emphasize softly draped but controlled neckline shapes.

Nighttime's blouse chiffon bodices outline the neckline in jeweled embroidery which falls from the shoulders. The star-burst of embroidery is repeated at the wrist of slenderly tapered sleeves.

OTHER NECKLINE plays for nighttime include shawled and scarved bodices which drape the shoulders in soft folds of fabrics.

More baring is a petaled neckline which uncovers the throat and shoulders and the waistline plunge of a jeweled pajama pant jacket.

For day, there are cowl necklines, V-draped scarves replacing collars and long scarves sewn into the bodice and wrapping the throat.

Capes are primarily collarless, allowing free-standing necklines to be tied by a scarf and accented by oversized buttons.

The neckline effect in the collection is soft, framing the face in the folds of a scarf and continuing into the full proportions of capes, blousy bodices and awing skirts.
