

Night takes on glamour

There is old-time glamor aplenty for wearing under the stars this fall.

If wistful swirls of chiffon, velvet-covered shoulders or glamorous beading are your idea of eveningwear, this is the season to turn fantasy into fact.

The Alfred Bosand collection, shown last week at Claire Pearone, Troy, created fashion images of romantic dresses finished with matching cover-ups.

SHOULDERS are covered with brief beaded capes or longer cloaks of chiffon. Beneath are thin-strapped bodices.

Bosand explained the inclusion of the cover-up in many of his designs as an outgrowth of practicality. Women, he said, frequently wonder what to toss over eveningwear, particularly during seasons too warm for fur.

His accessory, he explained, also makes a "complete ensemble, rather than just a dress."

Bosand's collection is not a compilation of exaggerated looks.

THE COVER-UPS are not too voluminous, the New York designer said, because many women could not wear them comfortably and unself-consciously.

Instead, Bosand styles chiffon, satin and velvet into traditionally glamorous looks.

His chemises are designed by shaping a figure-defining silhouette under a loose overlay of chiffon. Gowns fit over the bodice, easing into relaxed skirt shapes.

Pajama pants are not included in the collection. Commenting that some women look "ungainly" in the ensembles, Bosand said he has never executed the look.
