'Magic' entices theater lovers

Proof! Play some music, add a gown, wave a wand and suddenly it becomes the "Magic of It All." And it recently was at Somerset Mall when "The Magic of It All" was presented as an elaborate salute to the theater. Choreographed and directed by Bob Bandsuch, the show began with a flash as night-attired models floated across the stage.

Black captured the opening scene with the spotlight moving from a sequined evening coat to a black jersey gown to a black mink paw men's coat to a black tuxedo made expressly for women.

After black the color scheme spread into a spectrum from a rusty tweed suit to bright white gowns and pyjama sets, beaded coral colored evening gown or a men's camel wrap coat.

The fashions were coordinated by Affiliated Models Inc. and matched with the theater atmosphere as one luxurious design after another appeared onstage.

IN AN INTERNATIONAL adventure the fashion scene changed from the wool pant suited tailored looks to chiffon oriental catans, velvety Russian Cossack looks and printed organzas.

As with any production, there is seldom an all female cast and the men had their scenes in "Magic."

A black and yellow plaid suit offered the perfect office attire that could last through an evening at the theater.

Or for those leisure hours at the football game, the focus falls on a sheepskin coat with enough bulk to keep any man warm.

Also included in the show were the voices of the Village Players whose musical renditions brought Broadway numbers to the local stage.

Songs such as "Come Back to Me" accented a traveling segment or "Open a New Window" advised the audience to be adventurous with fall fashions.

If the music and the fashions weren't magical enough, Don Hudson brought along his mysterious tricks, including an endless supply of scarves and a box that suddenly becomes a rabbit, of course.

After the last trick was done, the last gown shown and the music dying out, the applause began, which is the only way to end any theatrical production.
