

Laborer's Free Explanation of the Presence of Fossil in the Block of Stone.

When William Pengelly was a sailor boy, weather-bound on the coast of Devonshire, he had his earliest geological experience, and Mr. S. Baring Gould, the author of "Cornish Characters and Strange Events," says he was wont to relate it as is printed below: I received my first lesson in geology at Lyme Regis very soon after I had entered my teens. A laborer whom I was observing, accidentally broke a large stone of blue lias and thus disclosed a fine ammonite—the first fossil I had ever seen or heard of.

"What was that?" "If you read your bible you know what it is," said the workman, somewhat scornfully.

"I have read my bible. But what has that to do with it?" "In the bible we told there was once a flood that covered all the world. At that time all the rocks were mud, and the different things that were drowned were buried in it, and there was a snake that was buried that was there lots of 'em, and other things besides, in the rocks and stones hereabouts."

"You must read the bible, I tell you, and then you'll find out why I use snakes and don't go to heads. We're told there that the seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head, that's how it is."—Youth's Companion.

Joint Worm's Devastating Work.
There is a report from the entomological commission at Washington that these pests inspecting the condition of the wheat, and especially as to the effects upon it of the joint worm, which he says is gradually increasing its devastations, and unless it is arrested and destroyed, it will ruin the wheat crop of this state will not be worth the sowing and harvesting. This great collects samples of the wheat, with the view of working on it, which he sends to Washington for inspection. This joint worm is a thread-like worm about a sixteenth of an inch long, grown from an egg that is deposited on the wheat stalk, and down the inside of the wheat burrows, absorbing the sap and substance of the wheat, and in this way completely ruining it.

No way to destroy this worm or to resist its ravages has been discovered.—Ohio State Journal.

Profit in Blue Gum Groves.
In setting out a eucalyptus grove for profit about five acres are planted to the tree. For the first three years irrigation is necessary, but after that no further attention is needed. Naturally some of the trees are malformed and stunted and these are cut for firewood when three or four years old.

The next better class of trees as they attain sufficient size are cut for railroad ties, posts, bridge timbers, filling, telegraph poles and similar purposes. The best and straightest of all are allowed to grow until they are eight years old, or much longer if the production of very large timber is more desired than quick return. The best quality of large timber when manufactured into lumber sells at from $100 to $140 a thousand feet at once in cablotment and interior finish.—The World Today.

King of a Coconut Isle.
Unheralded, a monarch arrived in the city recently when King William of Tonga disembarked from the steamship Mariposa. The king, who prefers to be known by the plain American title of W. J. Williams, is the sole owner of the island of Tonga of the Southern Ocean, French Polynesia. Although without army or navy, unless his own arsenal and canoes may be considered such, Williams is more absolute than any reigning European ruler, as he is the sole owner of the island, which is covered with a valuable coconut grove. Williams says that within ten years his principality will be supporting over 50,000 bearing coconut trees.—San Francisco, Cal. Dispatch to Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

When the Poet Was Happy.
Blornson, the poet, who is now lying seriously ill at Charleston, was once asked what occasion he had for the greatest pleasure from his fame as a poet.

His answer was: "It was when a delegation from the right came to my house in Charleston to stand before the windows, because when they had thus attacked me and were starting for home again they felt that they could not sing anything, and so they began to sing 'Yes, we are this land of ours.' They could do nothing else. They had to sing the song of the man they had attacked."
