

18 students win writing awards

FARMINGTON—Eighteen second-year students were recognized as successful contestants in the 1975 Detroit News Scholastic Writing Awards. One student, Marc Jacobs of Power Junior High School, won a Gold Key in the short story division. The Key is the highest award in the contest.

More than 7,500 entered on the junior and senior high levels, and 875 students won awards. Successful entries will be sent to New York to be judged in the National Scholastic Writing Awards competition.

Three seniors from North Farmington High School won honorable mentions, including Craig Newman and Nancy Roper for journalism news, and William Lough for journalism editorial. Newman also won an honorable mention for journalism sports.

Barbara Vagstad of East Junior High School won an honorable mention for her short story, as did East's Janice Lukaszewicz for her poetry. Power Junior High's Kristine Paul won an honorable mention for her autobiographical article.

Alicia Bergers and Ann Knauser of Power received honorable mentions for their short stories, as did Mary Ross for her sketch.

Bill Schipper of East and Power's Craig Holt won commendations for their short stories. Debbie Gregory, Harold McLean and Michael Weller of Power won commendations for their short short stories.
