to it. Almost a carnival-like atmosphere, the usually car-laden Belle Isle becomes a biker's arena. Streets are blocked, tents are pitched, in the wee hours of the morning marathon riders fall asleep waiting in line for food or in any spot that looks more comfortable than a bike seat.

On the road they struggle, avoiding crashed cyclists, rocks, sometimes crabs. And if they make it, no one profusely congratulates them or makes much of a fuss over any one individual. And that's the draw, the individual. Personal pride and a small patch are the rewards. When it's over you go home, ask in a hot tub and fall asleep knowing that you, all by yourself, rode 200 miles and if no one else cares it doesn't really matter.
