Do you want a new hair color? Study the facts carefully

If you're thinking of coloring your hair, remember that hair dyeing is an ally business. If you have healthy hair and scalp, if you are generally healthy, if you follow directions precisely, and if you don't expect miracle results, you will probably be safe, and even happy, coloring your hair. But make sure you get all the facts before you color your hair: it takes a long time for mistakes to grow out.

The Food and Drug Administration has a fact sheet which may help you called "If You're Coloring Your Hair." This informative reprint from the FDA Consumer explains what the different types of hair coloring are (such as oxidation dye, metallic dye, etc.), and how each can affect your hair. The fact sheet is available from Consumer Information, Dept. 42, Pueblo, Colorado 81009.

THE REPRINT also stresses the importance of safety factors when you're coloring your hair. Many people have painful allergic reactions to hair dyes. It is most important to do one in order to determine whether you will be allergic, too. The instructions on the patch test usually say you should apply the product to a small area of skin—behind the ear or inside the elbow—and leave it for 24 hours. If any redness or swelling occurs, you should never use that product.

You must take a patch test every time you use a product—you can become sensitive gradually. Don't assume that adverse reactions will not take place simply because you never had trouble before.

Once you develop an allergy to a type of dye, you remain allergic to it for life. You may be able to use other types of dyes, but, once you're allergic, it's dangerous to experiment. The safest way to find out which alternative dyes you may use is to consult a dermatologist. All allergic reactions should be reported immediately to a physician as well as to the manufacturer and the Food and Drug Administration's Division of Cosmetics Technology.

Farmington AAUW sale needs more used books

The Farmington AAUW still needs books for its used book sale which will be held Sept. 25-28 at the Livonia Mall.

Any used books may be taken to the Farmington Library on Twelve Mile Road or dropped in one of the two AAUW book barrels. One barrel is in the Wrigley's Store at Thirteen Mile and Orchard Lake and the other is at the A & P Supermarket on Farmington Road. If you need someone to pick up the books, call 477-6287 or 476-9012.

dents whose undergraduate education was interrupted because of family responsibilities.

A portion of the money is also given to the Farmington libraries and to local scholarships.

Co-chairpersons for this year's sale are Nancy Davis of Farmington and Doris Gaston of Southfield. Scheduling is handled by Lucille Roges of Farmington and Betty Ritchie of Northville.

Mary Lou White of Farmington is head of hospitality and cleanup will be supervised by Stephanie Bury of Detroit.

Safety first in home canning

Canning your own fruits and vegetables can be economical, tasty and self-satisfying, but there are certain precautions you should take in order to insure freshness and guard against bacteria or spoilage.

All fruits and vegetables should be washed well before canning. Dirt contains some of the bacteria hardest to kill.

If you're canning in glass jars make sure all jars and closures are perfect. Discard any with cracks, chips, dents or rust. Defects prevent airtight seals and seals may be airtight to prevent spoilage.

Jars should be washed in hot, soapy water and rinsed well, in with all lids and bands. Metal lids with a sealing compound may need boiling.

If you use rubber rings, have clean, new rings of the right size for the jars. Don't test the rings by stretching since they must fit perfectly. Rings should also be washed thoroughly.

When canning, you should always check for spoilage. Look closely at jars and cans before opening them. Bulging can ends, jar lids or rings may mean the seal has broken and the food has spoiled. Other signs of spoilage when opening your canned goods are spurting liquid, an off-color odor or mold.
