Names in patchwork

A unique patchwork quilt went on display this week in First United Methodist Church of Farmington, bearing the names of all charter members of the Senior Citizens Social Club. It is the work of Beulah Kelly (right) shown here with club president Grace Carlin, who founded the first group for seniors in the Farmington area. An off-shoot group of the original club now meets in the church every Tuesday morning to quilt, to make patchwork lap robes for patients in hospitals and nursing homes, and to sew cancer pads.

Gardeners contribute to community compost

A community compost for all city gardeners has been started by the Farmington and Farmington Hills beautification commissions. Permission has been secured from the Farmington Board of Education for the compost site on the west side of Drake Road, between 1-696 and Twelve Mile.

A place in their own yards for a compost pile.

The leaves are much too valuable a natural resource, the commissions believe, to be stuffed into plastic bags and given to the trash collector.

For those who do have room to keep the leaves, the commissions advise piling them in an out-of-the-way corner. Layer them with a little garden soil and mix in a little fertilizer to hasten the process.

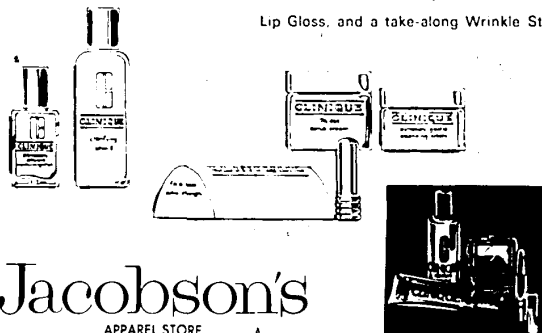

The pile should be turned a few times a year to mix and aerate it, and should be kept moist. Within a year the leaves will be broken down into substances the plants can use.

The commissions refer to the the compost as their "leaf recycling project" for all residents who don't have
