Twas the night after Christmas and all through the house.

The clothes were all scattered by children and spouse.

Her runned burgundy stockings hung over the chair and she hoped she could find another such pair.

She thought to herself, that she had looked quite nice, in her burgundy jumpsuit and a little fake ice.

The rhinestones had sparkled, round collar, on ears. She hadn't felt that feminine in so many years.

Her shoes, they were sleek, with t-straps and squared toes;

the burgundy color would go with many of her clothes.

And John had looked great, in his blue pin-striped suit, a Bill Blass tie and a shiny black boot.

He really looked sleek, (she thought right out loud.) In fact, he would probably stand out in a crowd.

Though the pink shirt had helped, the vest made his look, and the scarf in his pocket came right from a book.

And there were the children, so cute and so sweet, they minded their elders and kept themselves neat.

Little Jimmy looked handsome, all grown up and new; in his brown velvet blazer, bow tie and brown shoe.

In camelhair wool, his pants were flared slightly.

But after the sleigh ride, they really were unsightly.

And Susie was darling in her red jumper dress, though after dessert it was really a mess.

But her bowed and white blouse, all edged in fine lace,

Really looked sweet round her four year old face.

And with little lace tights and patent leather shoes;

Well dressed like that, how could anyone lose?

If you put us together, we'd be quite a sight, in burgundy, red, brown and blue for a night.

But Christmas is the year's most wonderful day, and its warmth and its love all really stay.

We had rushed to the doors and welcomed our guests, and rose early that morning to put on our best.

But the main thing of all, when our memory lingers is something we can count on one little finger.

It's not how we looked or the gifts that we sought, but the joy that we gave and the love that we got.
