

Township Residents Seek Cooperation of Hunters

Special appeals have been made by a number of Farmington Township residents asking hunters to respect posted areas and to observe the laws.

Mrs. W. J. Spicer, 21915 North Farmington Road, stated that in spite of the fact that her property is posted, hunters continue to trespass. She added that the property which extends west almost to Drake Road is a wildlife sanctuary. Mrs. Spicer stated that the worst offenders are coon and pheasant hunters. She emphasized that the property is being patrolled and the police have been notified.

A number of other appeals have come from residents living in the more populated subdivisions in the township.

When hunters meet, the devil goes to dinner.

ROLLING DOWN THE RIVER

By Bob Kettler

Come a hundred years ago this month, a couple of brothers, Studebaker by name, figured there should be easier means of riding behind the five horse power of that day, so they went out and built it themselves. They had phonograph and bugles, covered wagons and station wagons and all in all did a much better job of providing people with true riding comfort than any other builder in business at that time. Later on the gasoline motor came into being and any number of characters came up with one version or another, which they called the carriages of the day. Somehow, we've an overpowering suspicion that many an elderly man who has lived in the carriages of the day. Somehow, we've an overpowering suspicion that many an elderly man who has lived in the carriages of the day.

So here, a hundred years later, we're celebrating the centennial of the Studebaker Brothers, who now produce a most excellent motor vehicle, complete with a powerful, fast motor, streamlined design, superb riding comfort and ease of handling. We're sort of taken over show-room apart and made a bit of museum out of it, after miles and miles of seeking here and there for the many wagons and other conveyances, including a covered wagon. In fact, we found so many we've overflowed our show room and are using our lot for a bit of display. We've also installed an old fashioned blacksmith shop and a split-rail fence that we're reasonably sure Lincoln didn't split, and have come up with a display to make it well worth your time to drive around and see and we most sincerely hope you do.

Matter of fact, we've spent so much of our off time rounding up these historical items one of the salesmen complained that the carefully cultivated shine on his blue serge suit is now only a disgustingly dull glow.

Of course we must remember, anniversaries, elections or other distractions to the contrary, old fabric time has a habit of stepping right along and right about now it's time to winterize that car of yours. It needs a bit of anti-freeze in the radiator as it never was designed to be a deep-freeze unit. It needs special oils and greases for easier starting and greater motor protection; and it, no doubt, needs a motor tune-up, now that the thermometer has returned to the low-lands. Better let our expert mechanics see your own.

That's that, but we heard recently that a fellow was caught selling horse meat as beef. Would have got by, too, except the cook forgot to take the harness off.

Yours,
BOB KETTLER

KOREAN VETERANS MAY RECEIVE UNEMPLOYMENT AID

"Michigan veterans of the armed forces who have had 90 days of continuous service since June 27, 1950, may be eligible to receive unemployment compensation payments Title IV of the new Veterans' Readjustment Assistance Act, after October 14," Max M. Horton, director of the Michigan Employment Security Commission announced this week. Few are expected to register, however, he said.

"All of these unemployed veterans who have been discharged or released under conditions other than dishonorable are urged to visit the M. E. S. C. offices in their neighborhood and register for work," Horton said. "With the labor market being in its present 'tight' condition, hundreds of jobs are going begging for applicants," he added.

Terms of the new act provide that all requirements of the State Employment Security Act must be fulfilled before the veteran may receive these benefits. He must be unemployed for lack of work, or through no fault of his own, registered for work with the commission, able to work and available for work. The State Act requirements that he be seeking work applies as well, and he must meet all state eligibility requirements.

The new law provides $26 a week for 26 weeks, or $676 in benefits. He is required by law to file a claim for any state unemployment benefits to which he may be entitled (only 24% of the states have any benefit rights) or any railroad unemployment insurance system before he may claim federal benefits. Should the state benefits be less than $26 weekly, the federal benefits will augment them to that amount. The unpaid balance of the Federal funds will remain to his credit until he claims it.

"If the veteran is unemployed after October 14, 1952, and wants to file a claim, he should bring his discharge papers, social security card, and a list of employers for whom he worked during the 15 months prior to his entering the service, and up to the present date," Horton said.

EACH CHILD HAS OWN GROWING PATTERN, SAYS U-M EDUCATOR

Your child, and every child, has a unique design for growing, Willard C. Olson, dean of the University of Michigan School of Education, asserts.

Each youngster has his own requirements for water, food, sleep, exercise and parental attention, he says, advising parents not to worry if their child's needs are not the same as published averages for his age.

The growth pattern is determined largely by heredity, Dean Olson explains, adding that there is a "wisdom of body" by which each child tends to act according to his own wants. If your offspring's needs aren't met, he will suffer, warns the dean.

No one knows how much each child should sleep, the educator points out. "Problems will arise if you insist on an early bedtime and a late rising hour, when the child actually does not need so much rest," he states.

"Sleep can become the focus of a great many behavior problems, since there is so often a difference between the amount of sleep you want your child to have and what the child really needs," he continues.
