Watching the Olympics on television is fascinating, breathtaking, exhilarating, fun—and just a bit leveling.
When you've been feeling your years for quite a few of them, and borne groveling birthday cards that say things like "When I grow up I want to be just like you—old," it's a little funny to see your offspring wonder if they too are getting on.
Our 20-year-old said it first. That age in itself had been a hurdle for her, so I wasn't surprised when she commented that it was the first time she'd watched the Olympics when so many of the athletes were younger than she.
SOMEONE WONDERED when I had noticed that.
Actually, I couldn't think of a time when I watched a single Olympic competitor older than I, but I do remember a shocked feeling one long ago hockey game when I looked down the rosters of the Red Wings and their opponents and found only one player born ahead of me.

But we weren't through with years weighing heavily.
Miss 17 admired the grace of the one of the U.S. ice dancers and realized she was her senior by several months.
Her dad then pointed out quite a few more teenagers in the world competition.
He also mentioned a certain young lady we remembered well—in newspaper pictures rather than on television—and came up with the information that Sonja Henie was competing in her first Olympics even before she entered her teen officially.

THAT BROUGHT a minor groan even from our youngest, who at 14 wasn't feeling too depressed about the exploits of famous young athletes.
I keep telling the girls it's not all that bad to be over the hill. You find all sorts of company there, and you have lots of time to make yourself at home.

Looks like open season for the tee dress. A keyhole neckline on a striped knit that has lots of swifty, stitch-pleat skirting. White with navy, peach or lemon, acetate-polyester knit, for 4 to 12 sizes, 184.

Now I've got the answer to everything. Stripes everywhere—horizontal on top, mitered on the skirt. And a cinched waistline to tie it together. Blue-and-white acetate-polyester for 4 to 12 sizes, 184.

The lacy touch to see me through. It's an off-ice-out-to-dinner kind of thing with ribbed, solid trimming and a stitch-pleat skirt. Brown-and-white acetate-polyester for 4 to 12 sizes, 198. Innovations for Young Dimensions.

I've earned my stripes. They're knit and they fit me to a tee, and they're from Saks Fifth Avenue
