married Algernon Charles Frederick Sartoris a young Englishman

Their wedding, which it took President Grant 18 months to make up his mind to permit, was by far the most posh social event at the White House for several years--before and after.

Neither the bride's name or that of the bridegroom were mentioned on the 200 invitations issued by the Grants, but the romance, which had begun aboard ship, was the talk of the town and no one needed identifications. All they needed to know was that there was to be a wedding where, and at what time.

The subsequent event according to the New York Herald reporter who managed to worm his way in, although the press had been officially barred, nothing to equal it was ever before witnessed.

The bride's gown, costing $5,000, was white satin. She had eight bridesmaids, all clad in white.

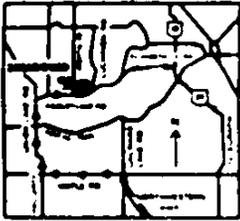

And the bridegroom added his own far out note by carrying a bouquet of orange blossoms and tuberoses from which protruded a small banner bearing the word "Love."

The breakfast menu consisted of soft-shell crabs on toast, chicken croquettes with green peas, lamb cutlets with tartare sauce, aspic of beef tongue, woodcock and snipe on toast, salad with mayonnaise, strawberries with cream, orange baskets garnished with strawberries, Charlotte Russe, Nesselrode pudding, blancmange, ice cream with preserved fruits, water
