Moral perspectives

How do we define progress?

Progress means many things to the people of the world. For some it means escape from hunger, from poverty, from disease and ignorance. For others it means sharing more fully the good things of civilization.

Modern industry is built on greed if profit is the only motive. When private ownership of modern industry admits no social obligations, and claims unlimited freedom, the way is clear that leads to the tyranny of wealth.

People can grow faster than food. The state can step in here, with advice and practical help, provided it respects the moral law, and the parent's freedom. Parents themselves must decide how many children to have. Parents themselves must consider their responsibilities before God and before each other, before their present children and before the community. Parents themselves must follow their consciences, formed by the law of God.

Conference speaker

Mrs. Irving Rogoff of Long Island, national leadership training chairman for the Women's League for Conservative Judaism, will be the speaker for the annual spring conference of the league's Michigan branch. It will be held Tuesday and Wednesday, May 11 and 12, in Congregation Bath Achim, Southfield.

WHOSE IDEAS are these statements? Is this a commentary by Eric Sevareid on television national news? Are these ideas of such people as John Kenneth Galbraith or Victor Reuther or other members of the Democratic Party branch called Democratic Socialist Organizing Committee? Or are they statements of Michael Harrington in his book "The Other America"?

These are the statements of Pope Paul VI in his special document on the developing nations of the world. They are excerpted from the English translation of Pope Paul VI's encyclical "Populorum Progressio." (This is Progress.) copyrighted in 1967 by Claretian Publications by R. V. Bogan.
