

Artists exhibit at Roeper School

One hundred and eight artists and craftsmen will display their creations for purchase at Roeper City and County School's first annual Scholarship Arts Festival.

The two-day event is scheduled from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday and Sunday, on the Roeper grounds, North Woodward between Long Lake and Square Lake roads.

Artists and craftspeople include sculptress Roberta Amstadt; jeweler Mari Bernstein; painters Joyce Ellington, Charlotte Raymond and Georgia Robinson; fiber artist, Jacqueline Bergward and potter, Bucki Kader, all of Troy.

Sculptor, Jason; jeweler, Marge Knecht; painter, Lou Malar and weaver Cynthia Savell, all of Birmingham will also be exhibiting.

From Bloomfield Hills are potter, William J. Jengst, Jr. and painter, Bonnie Sabine. Rochester will have painters Dennis Dodson and Charles Gatewood, sculptors Sam and Nina Settler, painter and sculptress Rita Stocken, and Isabela Schillace who does pen and ink drawings.

Also on hand will be candlemaker Robert Bradley of Farmington and Leslie Steiner, ceramist and potter from Southfield.

The Festival weekend will actually begin Friday, at 8 p.m. with an auction in the Domes area. All Stagnone of the Park West Galleries will act as auctioneer for nearly 100 beautiful, imported and U.S.-produced prints donated by London Arts, Inc., in the Fisher Building. Included will be prints representing the contemporary school.

In recent years, the annual spring event to benefit the Roeper Scholarship Fund has played an increasingly important role in maintaining a school available to gifted youngsters from a cross-section of socio-economic backgrounds.

"We've tried hard to keep Roeper from becoming a place for just bright, rich kids," a school spokesman said, "but inflationary pressures have forced even some with partial scholarships to drop out, because their parents couldn't afford the balance of the tuition."

"It's really too bad. We need those kids as part of our educational process just as much as they need Roeper."
