Roving with Rover needn't be an ordeal

Traveling time for many Americans raises the question of what to do about the family dog.

"There is no reason not to take the family pet along on an extended road trip. Furthermore, leaving the family pet behind in a kennel costs money, adding to the vacation expense. All it takes is a bit of planning," says Mrs. Pat Dittmann, public service representative of the Alpo Center for Advanced Pet Study.

"Each year thousands of dog show people travel all over the country with their dogs to compete in dog shows.

"A wire traveling crate with a secure snaplock is the most useful item a pet owner can buy when taking their pets on a motor trip. They can be purchased at any pet store, and the return in peace of mind, knowing the family pet is secure, more than offsets the cost.

"The traveling crate is more than security," Mrs. Dittmann says, "it becomes a home for your pet on the road. A water dish can be
