SEVER SAYS the success of the fectival is due mainly to the efforts of certain individuals and businesses who receive little or no recognition for their contributions.

"Take for example the DPW," he said. "They did a super job for us this year. We ask a lot of those people, and if not for them, the festival would have been mothing." There is the superior that the superior that the superior the superior that the

"Could you picture what it would be like if everyone started setting up their booths whenever and wherever they pleased? It would be utter chaos."

The job of coordinating he parade fell to the husband and wife team of Gary and Sue Miramonti.

"This year's parade was probably the finest ever," said Sever, "Gary and Sue did a tremendous job. We had over 12t entries. The thing people don't enailze though: is that we have to pay people to appear in our parade.

The overall cost of the parade was $3,000.

SEVER FEELS ONE of the major events of the entire festival was "Sunday in the Park", put on by a committee headed by Barb Hay. "This is what we wrap the festival up with," said Sever. "Families bring their picnic lunches and just come to relax. When the dinner belt rang flogs for the cast and too for a large logs." for ten cents and pop for a nickel.

The food, donated by the Farmington Area Jaycees, lasted four or

"We can have hundreds of booths set up in the shopping center," he excluded that the stopping center, he excluded that the stopping center, he excluded that the stopping center, and tooking and buying, the testival would be a flop. Same with the parade. We could have one of the best parades in the country, but if no-body was there to watch, who cares, the stopping center is to be even higher next very controlled to be even higher next very controlled to be even higher next year.

"We'll canvas area businesses in June and get about $1,000 or $5,000." said Sever. "They contribute the funds because they feel it as worth-while cause."
