"CURTAIN GOING UP"

By WALLY ROBERTS

Looking for an evening of solid entertainment under the stars? Something so great you'll come away wondering why you waited so long to see it?

This theatrical event is located in rolling hills of Bardonia, Ky., a little west of Lexington just off the Bluegrass Parkway. A short six-hour drive down Interstate 75 without a stop until you hit your air-conditioned motel in Bardonia. I'm rattling on about "The Stephen Foster Story," the outdoor musical comedy now in its 15th year. The songs and pleasant melodies of Mr. Foster fill the natural amphitheater in a most lovely fashion.

A top cast of singers and dancers make the evening a thrilling experience. Some of the featured singers have been returning for the June to September run for six years.

PAUL GREEN, famous for his "Lost Colony" outdoor special drama, has fashioned a sturdy script. Your interest is maintained as you eagerly follow the many set-backs experienced by Steve Foster.

Loss of his job, denial of marriage, tricked by the producer of a minstrel show, and a disastrous Fourth of July celebration provide scope and surprise to a musical saga bursting with melody and merriment.

There's room for 3,000 people nightly at the Stephen Foster Amphitheater and it's usually filled. Be sure to write ahead and reserve your tickets. Drop a line to the Bardonia Chamber of Commerce for your reservations.

Before the show starts at dusk, it's a good idea to visit "My Old Kentucky Home" where Mr. Foster wrote that immortal song. Your stay in Bardonia is not complete unless you do.

BEAUTIFUL Kentucky bellies encased in billowing hoop skirts are your charming guides. Their gracious conversation has a soothing effect not soon forgotten.

Bardonia is the center of the whiskey-producing industry. Be sure to see the Whiskey Museum and take a tour through one of the eleven distilleries in the area. You can be a teetotaler and still gain first-hand information about a fascinating process.

The whiskey tour and the visit to the Old Kentucky Home State Park are only the topping on the cake. The real reason for visiting Bardonia is "The Stephen Foster Story."

THE OUTDOOR drama will set you tingling as each scene scales new musical heights. The melodies have a nostalgic ring. "Jeannie With the Light Brown Hair," "Camptown Races," "Old Black Joe," "Way Down Upon the Swanne River," and the hundreds of other lovely Foster songs caress your ears so satisfactorily.

Put "The Stephen Foster Story" musical under-the-stars on your must-see vacation list. It's a Kentucky super-duper special.
